There are business institutions owned by men worth many thousand times the monin property, upon which cash can be the cash is in circulation. Give the sich man the property, and the poor money and let him hoard it up, and the man worth millions, with debts to pay, and how can he pay his debts and keep the wheels rolling that furnish employment for the poor man and supply the necessaries of life?

Supposing that every man in the United States that has a dollar on deposit in the banks should withdraw his money and hide it away? Most of the businesses of the country are run on borrowed money; this money belongs to the working man, the deposithe business cannot exist.

The effects of money stringencies are the same, no matter from what sich man hoarding the money up or from the poor man hoarding it.
