WHAT IS WORN.

Fan Rubbers for the Fastidious Girl.
 White Parasols Trying on Eyes.
 Auto regulations include the long pongee silk coat, generally made of pongee in the natural or tan color. As a touch to modify this monotone, hoods, collars and cuffs of tuxan plaids are being used of similar materials, result.

A Dainty Flowered Net—5725, 5726, 5727, 5728.

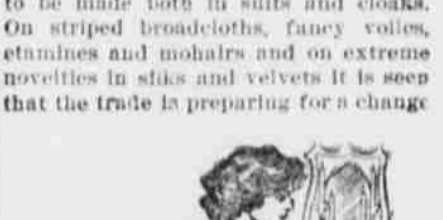

ling in a charmingly handsome garment for out of door use.
 Tan rubbers are worn on a rainy day by women who keep up with all the fashion fads of the moment.
 No parasol is more trying to the eyes than the white one, which catches the sun's glare. Green parasols should be avoided by women whose complexions are not rosy. The white parasol as a mere ornament can be carried at an angle so as not to affect the eyes. The green sunshade can be lined with white.
 Most attractive are the belts of flowered ribbon with oblong gold buckles across the back and front. They are very dainty on summer muslins that match in color.
 Many of the best evening dresses are of extreme simplicity, the skirts depending almost entirely upon their cut and long beautiful lines for their effect, and long in graceful folds without any trimming.
 The flowered nets are very beautiful this summer and make fascinating afternoon and informal evening gowns. The one in the cut is charming in color, a cream ground flowered with pale yellow roses and their foliage. The silk lined at the bottom of the skirt is of yellow mesaline, and the waist is trimmed with valenciennes lace.

VANITY'S VISIONS.

A Decided Change in Street Suits is Predicted For Fall.
 From the opinions expressed by leading designers in the cloak and suit houses novelties are to play a prominent part this fall in the first offering to be made both in suits and cloaks. On striped broadcloths, fancy velvets, etamines and mohairs and on extreme novelties in silks and velvets it is seen that the trade is preparing for a change

FOR MORNING WEAR—5728.

In styles from last year's staples. It does not follow, however, that the price of materials will be any lower—indeed, there is every reason to believe that they will be much higher in price.
 Shantung silk in a heavy weave will be extensively worn in the fall for tailored suits. It will be trimmed with braid either in comparatively plain, straight effects or in rather elaborate designs that almost simulate embroidery.
 A tan jumper suit made with a surplice bodice, mandarin sleeves and knitted skirt is a clever idea. The lace garniture which crosses each shoulder extends to the bottom of the skirt, being in the form of a pyramid. The deep V front is filled in with all over lace to match the other lace decorations. Such ornaments can be purchased ready for use.
 Shoes with openwork insteps are cool and costly. But they are worth the price paid, as they make the ankle look decidedly neat.
 The frock illustrated is a simple and tasteful design for morning wear. Waist and skirt are joined by a narrow belt, and the garment is open all the way down the front so that it can be slipped on with perfect ease.
