FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

Old Man of the Woods Game Has a Flavor of Mystery.

One of the company gets himself up to represent the old man of the woods. The rest take the names of various animals—such as lion, tiger, leopard, and so on.

The players seat themselves around the room, and the old man, standing in the center, tells them that some of their number have committed a crime and he is about to question them in order that he may discover the guilty ones. He then begins, "Now, Mr. Lion, where have you been hunting and what have you eaten today?" "I hunted in the forest and caught an antelope." "Then you are twice guilty and must pay two forfeits," says the old man. And the lion must pay his forfeit without being told the crime he has committed. The old man passes on to a polar bear. "Where did you hunt and what have you eaten?" he asks. "I hunted in the water and had a fine fish to eat." The polar bear is pronounced innocent. The secret of the game is that no animal may bring in the letter "o," either in his hunting ground or the food he eats. "Forest" and "antelope" both have an "o" in them, so the lion has to pay two forfeits, while "water" and "fish" having no "o," the bear was declared innocent. The fun is for the old man to keep the secret of "guilty" or "innocent" to himself and let the player try to solve the puzzle and where the catch comes in.—Philadelphia Record.

Invisible Ink.

Every now and then a boy wants to know how to make invisible ink. The best preparation is based on the use of cobalt, a reddish white metal of the iron group. The peculiarity about ink made from this base is that it may be made to disappear and to reappear at pleasure. To prepare it take zaffer, which is a crude cobalt oxide easily obtainable at drug stores, and dissolve it in nitromuriatic acid until the acid extracts from it the metallic part of the cobalt, which gives the zaffer a blue color. Then dilute the solution with common water. If you write with this liquid on paper, the characters will be invisible, but when exposed to a sufficient degree of heat they will become green. When the paper has cooled they will disappear. It is necessary to expose the writing to the heat carefully, for if the paper be heated too much the characters will not disappear after once appearing.—Chicago News.

King Caesar.

This is an outdoor play for boys. Two bases, or homes, are marked out—one at each end of the field or playground. Half the players go to each base—all but one, called "King Caesar," who stands between the two bases. The others run to and fro, and it is the king's business to catch them as they pass. When he catches one he taps him on the head, saying, "I crown thee king." The player thus caught joins in the capture of the others, helping to make more kings until all have been caught. The last player caught is the winner of the game and becomes first king if the game begins again.

Puzzle Your Friends.

Ask them what number of three figures multiplied by 8 will make exactly 10? Answer—1¼ or 1.25.

Place three twos together so as to make 24. Method—22 plus 2 equal 24.

Take 1 from 9 and make it 10. Method—IX; take away I and leave X.

Add 1 to 9 and make it 20. Method—IX; cross the I and we have XX.

Prove that 1 taken from 19 leaves 20. Method—Take the I from XIX and we have XX.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Playing Store.

A customer arrives and inspects the goods.—Youth's Companion.

A Riddle Answered.

Can anything be light and heavy at the same time? Why, of course. Didn't you ever hear of "heavy clouds of light gray?"
