NOTES OF THE MODES.
 Variations of the Tailored Skirt. Styles Modish in Dress.
 Skirts of strictly tailored suits are almost invariably plaited. Two grouped plaits are set on each side of the narrow tablier, while side or flat box plaits are placed around the sides and back of the skirt. The bell skirt, with its simple lines, is also an old favorite worn this season. It permits of much snugness about the hips and of extreme amplitude about the foot.

A CHIC EVENING COSTUME—5923, 5544.
 Again, there are the many good skirts, some of them showing ten or twelve gores, with the seams either lapped or stitched.
 Boas big, round, fluffy and from two to three yards long have ousted the handsome flat scarfs of last season.
 The new evening coats are positive in their forms, and they may be classed in two approved styles, the ecclesiastical and the military or round cloaks. The first are endless in their variety, and the second group vary very little. The trimmings are usually of braid, handsome cloth covered buttons or velvet.

In millinery the shady downward turned brim still holds its own, although the immense mushroom is seen less seldom than in the early fall.
 Evening frocks are very lovely this season. The one seen in the cut is typical and is to be recommended from every point of view. It takes the long, graceful lines that are so becoming and fashionable, including the new modified kimono sleeves, and it is finished with a tucker at the neck, which is always so dainty in effect.

FORECAST OF FASHION.
 The Empire Bandeau—Velvet Frocks in Rembrandt Shades.
 For evening dress coiffure there is an endless variety of ornaments from which to select a becoming arrangement for the hair. The empire bandeau is one of the most fashionable for the younger matrons and the woman of dignified carriage. It is generally of velvet spangled with opalescent metal or jet or shining with set jewels. It passes two-thirds around the head,

 Velvet tailor made in old Rembrandt and Vandyke colorings and picture hats in velvet with drooping feathers will accompany them.
 Many of the sashes used on evening frocks will have a deep added hem of silk or voile, according to the material of which the sash is made.
 A new velvet to be seen for the first time this season can be put through a small ring the entire width with no effort whatever. Another of the new velvets has a border of graduated stripes against a silk background.
 Hats of violet silk or velvet trimmed with trails of ivy or with branches of Virginia creeper in lovely autumn colorings are among the things the milliners are exploiting just now.
 None of the fashionable colors is lovelier than the pale tint that takes its name from absinth with scarcely more than a suggestion of green in it. In the illustration the gown is of this shade of crepe de chine. The flounce is of cream colored lace and the gumpes of all over lace in the same design.
