What is Green Broadcloth?
 The plain broadcloth with plaited skirt and coat approximating the thirty inch length is the dominating feature of the season. Skirts are short or of ankle length. Coats are of several styles. The Prince Chap and shanes approaching are extremely popular. This is the semilifting style of coat, which depends for a great deal of its style upon the excellency of cut and workmanship.
 Plain broadcloth is greatly used for the construction of the dressier tailored suits. In broadcloth suits much depends upon the color and correct application of their trimming.
 Velvet jackets with the new tight fitting cloth skirt are shown among the late novelties brought out by Paquin. The skirt is one of the season's sensations. It rises to a moderate grade height, fitting snugly around the hips and waist, and, falling from there in folds, drops straight to the ground at Dark rich green is one of the favorite colors of the season. The walking suit pictured is carried out in this shade in broadcloth. The skirt is a plain circular, and the coat is fitted by means of seams to the shoulders. The buttons and collars are of velvet.

HERE AND THERE.
 Many Smart Varieties of the Long Loose Wrap.
 Long wraps with big loose sleeves are much worn. The sleeves are trimmed in various ways. They are very wide, and there is a cuff made of silk or of tacked bands of taffeta, velvet or braiding. The same treatment is used upon the neck. These long wraps are made of silk, cloth, heavy crepe de chine for nice wear or of tweed or of mixed suiting, according to the use to which one is going to put the garment.
 Tight fitting black coats that are beyond their prime are made very smart by a strapping of black velvet ribbon, which is put on running from the neck downward toward the waist line, where the strips of velvet come together and are caught with a button. And the little Eton coats of various descriptions are trimmed with lace, put on in pattern and outlined with narrow rows of braiding.
 Uppers of cloth, or "spats," as our English cousins call them, to match the gown are the fad of the hour. For instance, purple cloth spats with a purple closth gown fastened with big white pearl buttons are smart, but a bit conspicuous.

 A small bow of black velvet ribbon is worn at the collar of lace blouses, which are very much more worn than lingerie affairs.
 Challie is always a charming material for a young girl's dress, and this season it is shown in beautiful colorings and designs. The dainty frock illustrated is of red challie dotted in black. It is trimmed with a black braid. The gumpie is separate.
