COMPOUND INTEREST

The trouble with most advertisers is that they expect immediate returns of large proportions. One prominent advertiser illustrates the principle of advertising in this way:

"The money expended for advertising is the same as if placed at interest. The profits from the advertising are virtually the interest on the investment.

"The sums spent for advertising are properly chargeable to capital account because the resulting good will is something that has value, which, if the advertising has been properly done, can usually be sold for the face value of the investment.

"The rate of interest is determined by the skill with which the investment is made.

"Just as the quickest way to increase invested wealth is by compounding the interest, just so the quickest way to realize results from advertising is to compound the returns."—Advertising Experience.

Advertisers get good returns on the amount invested in our columns. We reach the people.

A SHADOW.

Hans Allen lived in a little cottage in Jerusalem. One evening he stood long before the window shadow shutter. How difficult it was to get at closing it! The air was cool, the city still. Below in the narrow alley a crowd came a muleteer astride, dragging a heavy load over the back of the mule. The little hoofs clicked and slipped on the big, smooth stones. He sang a mournful song in the evening, playing a drawing, nasal tune of the olden time, and as he passed the window shadow of his voice remained in the air.

On the window shadow he had a brilliant vision. He saw a shadow that Hans could read, and he read it without difficulty. It was a defense of the established order of things, of standstill conservatism, abjecting of no exception. And as he stood there in the city where the idea of humane brotherhood was born and had gone forth over the earth as he glanced over the pages of the document he said to himself: "No, no, we young people are natural foes to conservatism. We are the ones who now in all ages have broken ground for the truths which have proceeded from this city." As he spoke he made an unconscious movement with his hand. At the same time his glance fell upon his own shadow on the wall outlined by the moon.

He could not restrain his laughter. Was not that the shadow of an actor, the head thrown back, the hand extended as if he were declaiming some stirring passage?

A feeling of shame swept over him as he considered for the first time that among the ideas transmitted from that city to the western world as a cargo of precious jewels was a tiny pearl, humanity.

He closed his eyes and pressed his hands over his face, and a thousand little stars seemed to flash before his sight. To be sure, it was merely the pulsations of his own blood which produced this sensation, and yet, little by little, those tiny lights ceased to revolve and looked for all the world like the pale stars which he had just been watching in the firmament. At length, aroused by voices in the street, he looked out.

Between the houses opposite there extended a wall. On the ground in front was a bright fire, and by that fire stood Christ surrounded by a few disciples and friends. Just behind him his shadow was clearly defined upon the wall.

John, the disciple whom he loved, mechanically picked up a blackened coal and with it outlined the shadow until he had delineated the entire figure of the Master upon the wall. Then he dropped the coal and entered into conversation with the rest.

Next morning when Hans Allen again stood at his open window and saw the people pass there were many who stopped and looked with curiosity at the drawing on the wall.

"That represents a muleteer. His back is bowed," said the muleteer.

"You talk nonsense," returned the muleteer. "That sleeping posture proves that he is a fruit vender. They forget to draw the basket on his back, but that half open mouth shows clearly that he is crying, 'Pomegranates! Come and buy! Come and buy!'"

A high official of the sanhedrin who passed and who of course did not mix his voice with the gabble of the tradespeople thought to himself: "It is perfectly plain that that represents a learned man and a scholar. One might almost take it to be a portrait of me. Possibly it is my own head, either. Probably some of the tradespeople drew it. Of course they all know me very well."

Mentioned one of the spectators had already approached the curtain drawing. He had a simple domino and a black, pointed hat. Nothing great was known of him; no chronicler has preserved his name, for he led a restless life away from the noise of the world. With hands crossed over the knee of his working stick he contemplated the drawing.

"What a noble forehead!" he thought. "What lofty humanity that bent frame suggests! Oh, if only one could be like that! But why wish for the impossible?"

As he stood there, silent and humble, the likeness to the drawing was so striking that everybody fell back, pointing to him in whispers.

Startled and ashamed, he slipped away, unable to understand why they should stare at him.

In his conscious humility he had remembered the Christ shadow.

Had he known this, and, proud in that consciousness, stood erect, the likeness would have vanished.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Antiquity of Umbrellas.

"How rich I'd be," said one umbrella salesman to another, "if I had patented the umbrella."

"You might as well talk of a patent on cooking," said his friend. "Umbrellas appear to have existed always. Indeed, wherever excavations have been made—at Babylon, Nineveh, Nippur—traces of the umbrella have been found. The English didn't begin to use it till 1700. Shakespeare with all his genius had no umbrella to protect him from the rain. What you might do would be to patent some new sort of umbrella—some rain shield built on better lines. We have proof that the umbrella has existed for 10,000 years, and yet in all that time it has not once been improved. Today, as it did two or three hundred years ago, it turns inside out with a strong gust of wind, and it only protects the head and shoulders from the rain. Change all that. I want an umbrella that is a complete rain shield. Then you will be a millionaire in six months."—New York Press.
