LAKEVIEW, OREGON, FEBRUARY 20, 1908

The idiot that runs the Silver Lake Whangdoodle, sometimes known as the Central Oregonian, says he does not publish nonsense, and as proof of his assertion, picks out an item published in The Examiner which had a typographical error in it and makes a great hullaballoo over it. But then one could not expect a $40 a-month editor to know news from nonsense. Whoever pays this thing $40 a month for throwing the rot and cheap slang at the people that the said sheet is dishing out to its readers is throwing his money away. He is dear at even that insignificant sum. He reminds us of a man our grandfather used to keep on his ranch merely to keep the crows from eating the corn. This man—no apologies, either, when such things as the editor of the up-country sheet is called a man—did not cost Grandpapa any 40 dollars, he was a cheap sort of a man, something like the Silver Lake editor, a piece of board driven in the ground and another piece nailed across the top, and some old clothes hung onto it, just a scare-crow. That about the capacity this scare-crow of a man is now serving in for the publishers of the Central Oregonian, but instead of scaring the crows away, he is kept to scare the wolf from the door.
