STORY OF A GOOD KING.

How the Sowing of Kind Deeds Returned Bountiful Harvest.

Sadly the king looked out of the casement. Beyond him stretched his kingdom, a kingdom that had formerly seemed fair to him, but which now, echoing as it was with the cries of all his people, appeared in his eyes to be worth nothing. He would gladly have given the vast lands to one who would relieve the sufferings of his subjects.

For a severe plague had fallen upon the kingdom, and to make matters worse there had come a dreadful famine. Disease lurked everywhere, nor was there anything to eat.

Again the king groaned: "Not one kind deed have I done for my people. Oh, if I could only help them!"

As he spoke there appeared before him a beautiful fairy.

Touching the king on the arm, she bade him follow her.

She led him from the castle out into the fields. And, lo, where the ground had lain waste without a growing thing there now rose vast fields of the grain, the golden stalks swaying in the wind.

"You have done many kind deeds, O king, and the care you have taken of every living thing has not been unobserved by us, for every grain which you so generously threw from your window to the hungry birds a grain has been sown for you by the fairies. It is now ripe for harvest. Go feed your people."

The king marveled and was glad for the sake of his subjects. And the famine disappeared, and the disease vanished, and all lived happily thereafter under their good king.—Philadelphia North American.

DROPS OF RAIN.

Why Moisture In Air Takes Globular Shape When It Falls.

Why does rain fall in drops and not in a sheet of water? How many boys and girls can answer that question? Perhaps those who cannot would like to have the explanation, which can best be given by telling first what rain is, says the Chicago News. The air contains at all times more or less watery vapor, which is evaporated from the ocean, lakes and rivers by the heat of the sun. When the temperature of the air falls below a certain point—that is to say, when the air loses a certain amount of its heat—this vapor condenses into water again.

The particles of water are quite small, and as they form in the air they begin to fall of their own weight, and in falling they meet and unite with other particles, thus forming drops. If the cloud from which they come be near the earth, the drops are larger than when it is higher, for there is less air resistance to be met in falling. The higher the cloud, then, on general principles, the more the drops are broken up.

But even if water ever formed in sheets or in a body up in the air, which it does not, it could not possibly reach the earth in that form, for the resistance offered by the air makes it break up into drops. That is the principle of the shot tower, by the way. Melted lead is dropped from an elevated point, and it breaks into shot before it reaches the ground.

An Interesting Bridge.

Visitors to Kandy, in the island of Ceylon, are shown in the neighborhood a beautiful bridge made entirely of satinwood and spanning the river Mahavilla ganga in one fine sweeping arch. It was constructed by Major Skinner, a clever military engineer, many years ago. One of the most remarkable points about it is the fact that no bolt, screw or nail is used in any part, and, notwithstanding the changes in temperature, all parts remain perfectly in order and position.

The Secret Grief.

Nina Alena Ann Isadore Jackson
Deep in her heart had a wish to turn pale.
Wished that her hair, 'stead of red, had been flaxen,
Thought it was stylish to seem somewhat frail.

Nina Alena Ann Isadore cried,
But she couldn't turn pale,
And she didn't look frail,
And her hair would be red, whatever she tried.

Surely a Dream.

Tommy—What would you do, Sammy, if a rattlesnake was in front of you just about to bite you, a panther was making ready to spring on you from a tree overhead and a wild man was about to shoot you?

Sammy—Gosh, I think I'd wake up about that time.
