Never Could Catch 'Em. "Yes," said Miss Passay. "I discovered a burglar in our parlor last night." "My gracious!" put in Miss Port. "Did you faint?" "No; I tried to catch him, but—" "Ah, your usual luck with men, eh?" Philadelphia Press.

The Objection. "Nearly everybody makes mistakes at some time or another," said the philosophic person. "Yes," answered Miss Cayenne; "you can forgive anybody for making mistakes if he isn't so egotistic as to insist on your admiring them."—Washington Star.

The Play. Manager—Now, as to the moral quality of the piece, we wish that to be very conspicuous. Playwright—By its absence? Manager—Oh, when it comes to mere details of method we leave everything to you, of course. We don't care how you manage it.—Puck.

A Lover's Suggestion. "Might I suggest, sir, as long as I am going to court your daughter regularly, that you place a new comfortable armchair in your parlor? I have to work hard at the office all day, and I can't afford to have my framework worn out at night."—New York Life.

The gallant rescue of a shipwrecked mariner.

Feared the Worst. With straining eyes the pale faced man watched the advancing policemen through the window. No sooner had the bluecoats reached the porch when, with trembling fingers, he drew a heavy revolver from his pocket and pressed the muzzle against his throbbing temple. Before his nervous fingers could pull the deadly trigger his faithful wife dashed the pistol aside. "John! John!" she gasped. "Don't! They've only come to summons you for a jury." "If that's the case I'll submit peacefully," answered the man, wiping the cold sweat from his brow. "But I'll die before I'll shovel the snow off that walk!"—Judge.
