COMPOUND INTEREST
The trouble with most advertisers is that they expect immediate returns of large proportions. One prominent advertiser illustrates the principle of advertising in this way:
"The money expended for advertising is the same as if placed at interest. The profits from the advertising are virtually the interest on the investment."
"The sums spent for advertising are properly chargeable to capital account because the resulting good will is something that has value, which, if the advertising has been properly done, can usually be sold for the face value of the investment."
"The rate of interest is determined by the skill with which the investment is made."
"Just as the quickest way to increase invested wealth is by compounding the interest, just so the quickest way to realize results from advertising is to compound the returns."—Advertising Experience.

CURED.
"Dear me, wife, not done yet? Why, here it is supper time, and you are still in your morning wrapper," said Mr. Williams as he came home from his work and found his wife still on deshabille.
"Yes, but do you not know that 'woman's work is never done? There is the baby, too?'"
"Yes, Ella, but do you not know that all women have so much to do? If you would only hurry the least little bit, you would accomplish all the work in a much shorter time. I could do it all in one-half the time."
"Oh, John!"
"Well, you just go off somewhere and see if you don't find things in 'apple pie order' when you come back." Thus ended the evening chat.
The Tuesday following she received a note saying:
"Dear Ella—Come immediately. I am very ill. Your mother."
When John returned from his work and had read the note he said: "Go, by all means. I will attend to the house-keeping," added he, with a confident air.
"John, I shall be obliged to leave the baby at home. In case I should not be at home again tomorrow will you see that he is fed?"
"Of course. Do you think I would starve him?"
"The next morning while Mrs. W. was on her way to her mother's house John was at home, introduced into the mysteries of the kitchen.
About dinner time he went down into the cellar and soon returned with a large bowl of sweet cream. After placing this on the table he put on his hat and coat and snatched down to the butcher's after a steak for dinner.
In going out he forgot to shut the door after him, and on his return home he found five cats lapping the cream he had left on the table.
"Well," he said, "I shall say nothing of this to Ella, but I'll broil the steak, and that will quite make up for the loss of the cream."
He then tied one of Ella's aprons around him, as he had seen Ella do when she was about to engage in some such kind of work, put the steak into a frying pan and covered it over with a pot lid, fully expecting to find the steak nicely done when he should again raise the lid.
Alas, however, the steak was burned to a cinder!
"That is strange," said John. "Ella's broiled steak never resembled this certainly."
By this time he was quite hungry. He was not quite so boastful as he had been that morning.
"There is, at least, one thing I'll have for dinner. I'll warm up the potatoes that are left over from yesterday's dinner."
So John put a large lump of lard in the frying pan and soon after the potatoes. The potatoes were soon warm, but as he sat down to eat them he was surprised at their greasy appearance as well as at the amount of lard left in the pan.
How many times he had wished Ella back again that day! In thinking of his many disappointments, together with the fact that he had not yet had his dinner, poor John knew not what to do with himself.
The ringing of the doorbell aroused him, and he, forgetting his ridiculous appearance, rushed to the door.
"I have come to call on Mrs. Williams," said the lady who rang the bell.
"Mrs. Williams is not in at present."
"Then I should like to see Mr. Williams if he is in."
"I am he, madam."
"You?" said the lady, trying in vain to keep from laughing.
Then poor John, suddenly recollecting his ridiculous appearance, felt ready to die of shame. There was no help for it, however. He invited the lady into the close front parlor, in which the fumes of the burned steak and hot fat were still distinct.
Scarce knowing what he was doing, he led her to the sofa, and she sat down, not upon it, but into the pan containing the lard.
John started back, not knowing what to do or say.
In the midst of these troubles the baby began to cry, and John, now terrified beyond everything, rushed into the other room, mentally resolving that if Ella did not come soon he would put an end to these trials.
The lady in the front room kept very quiet. She thought she heard some one crying. She listened. It was John. He was talking to himself. He said, "Oh, dear Ella, come back to me again and forgive me, and you shall never hear me boast again!"
Then the old lady in the front room slipped off her wig, her old black veil and her dress, and in a very few moments his Ella, for it was she, stood before him.
"Oh, Ella, forgive me!" were his first words on recovering from his surprise. She forgave him, then told him how she had planned all to cure him of housekeeping.
"You have done so, darling," said he.

Bored Concert Goers.
The music lover—meaning, of course, the layman—is so curiously constituted that he wants not only to enjoy music himself, but he wants others to enjoy it. He wants to force them to enjoy it, and to that end he will pay money out of his own pocket. Such elements are the spirit of speculation and local or civic pride may enter into the process of making up this huge annual deficit, but ultimately the subsidies which, direct and indirect, make possible a musical life in America will be traced to this curious characteristic. And this incidentally accounts for the many concert fairs one sees wherever music is the entertainment.—William E. Walter in Chicago.

SNAPSHOTS OF FASHION.
Dress Accessories in Which the Rose Design Figures Effectively.
Charming little things can be made with the rose as a motif. A pair of white satin slippers with a stuffed white rose worked upon the instep would make a pretty gift for a society girl, and the slippers of black satin or pink suede or soft gray and of violet are all worked in conventional roses of the very same shade.
And there are still other ways and many of them for making use of the rose for a dress trimming. A woman who is giving articles of dress for presents fashioned five wide bands of rose colored brocade with the embroidered roses standing out in high relief. The bands are for the neck and for each cuff, and there are two wider bands for the front of the coat or gown. The bands are veiled with chiffon and finished along each edge with embroidered embroidery.

A SATISFACTORY SHIRT WAIST—5843.
A life sized rose is fastened upon a hatpin, and this is thrust into the hat wherever it looks well. An American woman traveling abroad bought two of these hatpins, which she uses in her hat to set it off. The roses are bright red, and in putting on her hat the woman thrusts one in the bandeau and the other in the crown. The hat becomes charmingly finished by this little expedient. The making of these pins should not be an exceedingly difficult job for the woman who is handy and ingenious.
There is nothing especially new about the shirt waist sketched, but it is an exceedingly satisfactory model and can be made up in any material.

Handsome Gold Bands on Hats.
No matter what the color of your winter gown, the braiding must be black, and a touch of some black fur will give it all the chic of an imported frock.

IN BLUE VELVETEEN—5845.
Some of this trimming costs $20 a yard the staggering prices of millinery are not surprising.
A shirt waist seen recently was fastened down the front with small black bows of ribbon tied to flat beauty pins. The ribbon was about half an inch wide and made into small one inch bows. The trimming looked very neat down the front of this black silk waist.
Adjustable cuffs can be purchased in desired lengths to wear with short sleeved lingerie waists.
Velveteen is being very much used this season for the small boy's suit and is always handsome, while it is durable in the extreme. The suit illustrated is of dark blue velveteen relieved at the throat by an embroidered linen collar.
