It means a lens that transmits light without dividing it into its constituent colors. A ray of ordinary light is composed of the seven colors of the rainbow, as Sir Isaac Newton showed us by the use of the prism, each color having a different degree of refrangibility. When a direct ray is refracted, therefore, if divides itself into the colored rays, which deviate variously from the straight line of the simple ray and thus surround the object viewed with a balo of those colors. It was thought for a long time that this defect could not be remedied, but about 1750 a man named John Dolland made an improvement that accomplished the desired purpose. He found that flint glass and crown glass differ in their power of dispersing colors, and he made a double lens of flint glass, and the combination of the two gives an almost colorless image. The achromatic lens is of great value to astronomers and also to users of the microscope.

An iceberg is nothing but a fragment of a glacier detached by the action of the water, says the Chicago News, Some of them are of immense size and carry with them great masses of rock, earth and sometimes plants. Polar bears and seals have also been seen on them. Greenland is the place from which most of the icebergs in the north Atlantic come. The waters that wash the base of a glacier are somewhat warmer in summer than they are in winter, and this has the effect of loosening and detaching large parts of it. The ocean currents then bear these fragments toward the temperate zone, where they are gradually melted. It is during the latter part of the summer season that leebergs are most seen, for it takes a long time for them to become detached from the glaclers, with only the moderate degree of heat that the warm months give to northern waters. It is said that only about oneeighth of the leeberg shows above the water. If, therefore, one is seen that rises fifty feet above the sea, the sailor

The Discontented Dog.

A lovely dog, a proud old cat, Lived together in a modern fla The flat was way up in the sky (I think 'twas sixteen stories high). The dog one day said, with a sigh:
"I wonder, dear old pussie, why
Our mistress, who's so good, you see,
Makes such a dreadful fool of me?
For when she takes me for a walk,
I'd tell her if I could but talk, Please not to dress me up; you see It makes the doggles laugh at me." Now, pussy, who was very wise, Just opened wide her shining eyes And humped her back and curied her tail Then gave a curious yawnike wail. "Now, doggie, it is wrong, you know, That you should always grumble so-For all your mercles you should be Devoutly thankful. Do you see? If you were hungry or in pain, Were all bedraggled in the rain And had no place to lay your head,
Were longing for a bite of bread,
Then, doggie, you would know 'twas true.
I know it's so—I've lived it through.
So do not look at me like that,
For I was once a barnyard cat."
