FLIRTING.

Tim Jupp was a benedict—that is to say, he was married up to the standard. Tim was rather a fine looking fellow and knew it. He had married a woman a few years more ancient than he was because she had a few more dollars than he. He had a mother-in-law, a slight, well preserved old lady who had a marvelous way of making herself up and of appearing rosy and kittenish. She suspected that Tim was fond of other ladies—that he was inclined to pass himself off as a single man—and her heart yearned to prove it.

Her surmises had already awakened the jealousy of her daughter, and it had of late been so "warm" at his house that they didn't have to burn half as much coal as they formerly did.

But Tim was a persevering cuss, and whenever he felt himself at a safe distance from home he would unbend himself and be happy, for happy he was when he could find somebody to flirt with.

One pleasant afternoon Tim and a party of boon companions, dressed in the height of fashion, were meandering through the winding and devious ways of the park when a gay and dashing creature swept past them, casting back a coquettish smile that might easily have been interpreted into an invitation if either of them saw fit to take it up.

Tim was the first to speak, for he was an ardent youth.

"By jingoes, but she's a stunner! I say, fellows, just see me sail in and capture that charmer."

They agreed to wait and see him do it.

He turned and followed her. She didn't appear to be extra anxious to escape him, and so it was not long before he overtook her. Raising his hat, he saluted her.

She replied artfully, and in a few moments he seemed to have captured the fair creature for sure. His friends followed slowly behind to see how it would eventuate.

They reached a shady seat and, resting there, they kept up the same animated conversation that they started. Tim was somewhat taken. Exactly how she looked or how old she was he could not tell, for she had one of those illusory veils over her face, and they are such assistants to fraud that many a man has been taken in without going behind them.

The result was an appointment for the next day at the same place. Then they parted, and Tim joined his companions in high glee. They were disposed to doubt his complete conquest, and so it was arranged that they should be on hand the next day to see for themselves.

The next day found him on the spot dressed with exceeding care. His beautiful unknown was also on hand, and ere long they were engaged in earnest and loving conversation again.

"Oh, you naughty men!" sighed she. "You are always capturing the hearts of us poor, trusting women, and we are always the sufferers. How do I know but that you are a married man—belong to another?"

"What! Can you think me guilty of so much deceit?"

"You know, we are strangers."

"What signifies it? Fate brought us together, and we cannot deceive each other. I love you."

"Oh, sir, it is impossible!"

"And you are not married?"

"No, no, my dear. Fate has reserved us for each other. Until I met you I never loved."

"Oh, oh, how my poor heart goes! Let us retire to a place not so public, for I feel so giddy. Here, let us go into this arbor."

"Anywhere in the world with you, dearest," he whispered as she took his extended arm and they started for an arbor near by.

Here they again seated themselves, and Tim began to pour forth the same volume of poetry that he had used on so many other occasions. One of her little gloved hands he took in his, while his arm gradually stole around her shapely and unyielding waist.

At this moment a deeply veiled lady came up behind them, and Tom's friends were just passing through the arbor to see how well he was getting along.

His charmer called to the veiled lady.

"Come here, Mary, and just hear how sweet he talks."

He turned toward the intruder, who had in the meantime raised her veil, and, half rising, he confronted his wife. He felt as though a ten pound shell had exploded in his hat. He glanced from his wife to his betrayer, who had also raised her veil, and who of all people in the world should it be but his mother-in-law!

His friends vanished amid the most boisterous laughter, and his mother-in-law reached for one ear while his wife took hold of the other, and without a word they started with him in the direction of home.

Poor Tim Jupp! He is now a broken hearted and melancholy man. He avoids the park, and the places that knew him once would require an introduction to him now. A wig replaces his late Hyperion curls, and it is generally understood among his friends that his flirting days are over.

Daniel Up to Date.
Jimmy, aged five, was told the story of Daniel in the lion's den by his grandmother. When she had finished the story, she said, "Now, what do you think Daniel did the very first thing when he found he was saved from the lions?"

"Oh, I guess he telephoned home to his wife to tell her he was all right," answered Jimmy.—Harper's Monthly

A COMPLETE RECORD

We have made an entire transcript of all Records in Lake County, which, in any way, affect Real Property in the county.

We have a complete Record of every Mortgage and transfer ever made in Lake County, and every Deed given.

ERRORS FOUND.

In transcribing the records we have found numerous mortgages recorded in the Deed record, and not indexed, and many deeds are recorded in the Mortgage record and other books. Hundreds of mortgages and deeds are not indexed at all, and are most difficult to trace up from the records.

We have notations of all these Errors.

Others cannot find them. We have spent hundreds of dollars hunting these errors, and we can guarantee our work.
