BOWSER BUYS PORKER

Had Begun Saving Thousands When Calamity Happens.

PIG ESCAPES FROM ITS PEN.

It is an Unruly Beast Despite Owner's Plan to Rear it With Kindness—Mrs. B. Told to Pack Up Trunk and Leave Home.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.] The Bowser family had finished dinner and appeared to be in for a pleasant evening. Mrs. Bowser was reading a book, Mr. Bowser had his cigar and the cat was rolling over and over on the hearth rug and thinking her stars that she was not a wanderer upon the face of the earth such a night as that. Fifteen minutes had passed when Mr. Bowser uttered an ejaculation that disturbed everything.

MR. BOWSER STUCK RIGHT TO IT.

level it for months, hoping to see an immo-ment, but as there has been none I am at last forced to speak." "Well," "It is about your reckless waste around the house."

Mr. Bowser spoke kindly to him. No then he was cuffed on the ear and a savage grab at the hand that did it and sent out such shrieks as might soon attract a crowd. Mr. Bowser picked up a piece of board and menaced the Leghorn with it and the next moment he was knocked flat on the earth, and the pig went off in a streaking it down the alley. The one room porker had left the two roomer forever behind him.

"Very well. Get your pig and I won't even let the cook go out to the pen to look at him." "And if, by your order, she mixes poison with the garbage and puts an end to his career?" "Glared at Mrs. B."

building of the pen was an all day job. Mr. Bowser stuck right to it, however, and just at dark he had the "institution" finished and the bedroom filled with clean straw. Mrs. Bowser suggested a feather bed and woolen blankets, but her words passed unheeded. He had figured on going out into the country next day to buy his pig, but as he stood surveying the finished pen a man came through the alley and stopped to say:

"Hello, neighbor! Been building a pigpen?" "As you see." "But where's your pig?" "I'll get him of some farmer tomorrow."

"See here, neighbor," continued the man after looking the pen over more closely, "don't you think of buying a pig of a farmer. He will cheat the eyes teeth out of you. I live over on Chestnut street. Last fall I bought a pig; but as I didn't know anything about building a pen, he hasn't got along as well as I hoped for. I didn't suppose that pig wanted any privacy and I didn't provide for a bedroom. My wife is down with rheumatism and can't feed him, and if you want that pig I'll give you a bargain. I can have him over here in ten minutes."

"What is it, dear?" he was asked. "He rose up and took two or three turns up and down the room before answering. "I just saw something in the paper to remind me. Mrs. Bowser, I don't want to be always finding fault with you, but there is a matter I wish to speak about this evening. I have de-

"It's all very well," said Groop, "but talk about forgiving your enemies, but it's not easy to do." "You're right," replied Dudley, "but shouldn't be expected to forgive enemies except when they're free."
