JOHN W. REHART, of Lakeview, county of Lake, State of Oregon, has filed in this office his sworn statement,

FOR THE CHILDRENA Bear in Ice.

A miner in Alaska made a strange discovery not long ago. He found a cave in the side of a mountain and entered it for exploration. The mouth of the cave was small, the sides being of granite. Just beyond the entrance was a solid ice chamber, from the ceiling of which were hanging hundreds of ice stalactites. The rays from the miner's lamp made these stalactites glisten like burnished silver, and the effect was wonderfully beautiful. It was like a fairy palace, but the miner's admiration suddenly turned to alarm, for at one side of the chamber he saw a great black bear sitting partly upright. Being unarmed, except with an ax, the man determined to leave the bear in undisturbed possession when something in the appearance of the bear arrested his attention, and he then saw that it was dead—frozen solid in a block of ice. He struck the block of ice with his ax, and part of it fell away, carrying one of the bear's fore legs with it. When he picked up the ice it crumbled like rotten wood.

Trick With Coins.

If the boy magician is a much appreciated acquisition to an evening company, surely one that can turn one coin into two must be doubly welcome. Here is the way to perform this seemingly impossible feat: Prepare a penny by putting a little wax on it and then attach it by means of the wax to the underside of a table, near the edge. Now borrow another penny from one of the company and announce that you intend to turn it into two pennies. Holding the borrowed penny under your thumb, rub it briskly along the table near the edge with your hand under the table in such a position that you can at any time wish take off the penny that you have fixed there with wax and thus have two pennies in your hand. If neatly done this trick defies detection.

Jumping on a Fox.

A boy named Charles Williams, living in northern Michigan, was out in the woods one day looking for a lost cow when he came to a bank about eight feet high and saw a fox lying asleep at the foot of the bank. He made ready and jumped down and grabbed the fox by the ears. He didn't hold the animal more than a minute, and yet during that time he received seventy-one bites, thirty of which were on the face and hands. When the doctor got through plastering him up, he was a far wiser boy than before. Even when a fox wakes up suddenly out of a deep sleep he is prepared to do more biting than any other known animal. He is made that way and enjoys it.

Sneezing.

Did you ever hear any one say "God bless you!" after some other person had sneezed? Some writers attribute the benediction to St. Gregory, who enjoined its use during a pestilence in which sneezing was a fatal symptom. But here again we find a revival of an ancient custom, for Aristotle mentions it as existing among the Greeks, and Thucydides says that sneezing was the symptom of a crisis in the great Athenian plague. The Romans had the same custom, and so, it is said, have the native Indian tribes here. Isn't it strange how these queer superstitions originate and persist?—Chicago News.

Trading Rats.

It is said that in California there is a rat known as the "trade rat." The species seems to be an honest one as far as its intelligence goes. If you leave a pan of anything it likes in a convenient place it is not above taking it, but it puts something back. Once a pan of paste was left on a chair overnight. The following morning the paste was gone, but inside the pan were a long stick, a piece of rope, bits of paper, some nails and an unbroken glass funnel in payment for the paste.

A Candy Tip.

Here is a candy that the boy or girl can try for his or her next party to the delight of all the guests: Toast figs until soft, cut a slit in them and insert a marshmallow. Dip each of the stuffed figs in a coating of hot chocolate slightly sweetened as for icing and let it cool on buttered plates.

Congressional Light.

The capitol at Washington is illuminated by 23,000 incandescent lights. It takes 1,600 alone to light the roof of the house of representatives. In the busy hours to keep the engines going to furnish power for these lights it takes one ton of coal an hour.

A Tot at School.

She begged so hard to go! Each day, With pleading soft and wistful eyes, She'd tell, in quite relentless way, Her longings to be big and wise, And how she craved a book and slate, A pencil box and long thin ruler And, more than all, a copy plate "Like sister's," and to go to school.

Well, well, no stony sphinxes we! We looked into her bluebell eyes And dared not hint the age of three Plus one could never be very wise! Armed with a primer picture book, In which she'd studied half a day At least, we sent her on her way, She came back with ecstatic look.

All dimples, twinkles, bubbling pride, "I said my lesson too! I spelled A word all by myself!" she cried. "No, not all by yourself!" (I held Her head back with its fluffy frill) To seek the eyes long lashes hid, Surprised and pleased without. "I did! I waited till the teacher told Me, 'You spell it!' then I tried To 'member like you said it looked— One letter straight and one all crooked— An 'I' wanted 'em all to hear so bad, I said out loud, so, 'I-s, I-s' An' they all just laughed, they was so glad!"
