It was a typical autumn London night, the streets flowing with greasy mud, the air yellow with smoky fog and a cold, sleety drizzle falling as Hilda Smith arrived at Paddington

It was ber first experience of the great metropolis, but she had received her instructions, and, selecting her portmanteau, she had it removed to a cab and, jumping in, ordered the man to drive to the Ballarat mausions in Victoria street, Westminster.

Hilda was not a little anxious, because she had arrived in town & day ahead of her invitation, and she was not certain whether her bachelor brother, with whom she was going to stay 1908. for a month or six weeks, would be ready to receive her.

The door was opened by a hard faced looking woman of the charwoman type, who stood gazing at her without moving away from the entrance.

"Is this Mr. Smith's?" asked Hilda. "Yes, miss," replied the woman, without offering to let her in, how-

"Is he at home?"

"No, he ain't, and I don't know when

"But did he not expect me? He is my brother, and I have come to stay with him."

"Oh, indeed, miss. Well, he didn't say nothing to me about it," answered the woman. "But suppose you'd better have the spare room." And she stepped aside with a grudging air as she allowed the fair girl to enter.

Turning on the electric light, she showed Hilda into a handsomely furnished bedroom whose white and gold paint and blue satin furniture caused her to open her eyes in wonder, for her brother was not supposed at home to be in luxurious circumstances. The housekeeper brought her a cup of tea and some bread and butter, after which she retired to rest and did not wake until late the following morning.

"Mr. Smith came home late last night, miss," said the housekeeper when she aroused her with the hot water, "and told me to say that he would join you at breakfast."

The breakfast table was a picture to the eyes of the frugally brought up country girl, for it was covered with every delicacy in or out of season, and Hilda was admiring the priceless china when she heard footsteps approaching and turned around to welcome her brother.

"Oh, Jack," she exclaimed, dancing toward the door, with her arms outstretched, "I'm so glad"-

Then she stopped suddenly, as though she had been shot, for a tall, dark, handsome man, quite the opposite of her brother in appearance, entered the

"I am afraid that somebody has made a mistake," he said in a soft, kind, reassuring voice. "But I cannot be sufficiently grateful to whoever is to blame for sending me such a charming guest to breakfast."

"I expected to meet my brother-Mr. Smith." observed Hilda, nearly choking with confusion. "Mr. John Smith." "My name is John Smith." said the stranger, with an amused smile.

"Ah, now I see how the mistake occurred," exclaimed Mr. Smith. "This is No. 6, but there is another John Smith at No. 8, and our letters frequently get mixed up. I can only say that I am sorry it is the other John Smith who is the lucky man on this occasion. And now, my dear young lady, let us go to breakfast.'

At first Hilds could neither eat nor speak, but her host in a short time had succeeded in putting her so much at her ease that she was chattering away to him about her family, her home and all her little domestic affairs.

That breakfast must have lasted an unconsciously long period, but Mr. Smith did not appear to be desirous of hurrying it, and everything was so delightfully strange and novel to Hilda that she did not notice the lapse of time until her companion suggested that if they went around now they would likely find "the other Mr. Smith" at home to lunch.

Hilda hurried away to put her hat on, and the more she looked at the exquisitely furnished room, with its cut glass perfume bottles, chased silver powder boxes and all the hundred and one little additions that go toward making a woman happy, the more she wondered for whom it had been prepared.

Fortunately when they arrived at 8 Ballarat mansions they found "the other Mr. Smith" at home on the top floor, and Hilda could not help noticing how wonderfully civil he was to ber host and how eagerly he accepted his offer to dinner on the following evening for himself and sister.

After he had gone, however, the matter was explained. "That is John Smith, the millionaire," said her brother impressively, "and he is the managing director of the company I work for.'

The dinner was followed by a theater visit and supper, and so it went on antil the night before she should have gone home, when Mr. Smith asked her if she would change her appellation from Miss to Mrs. Smith.

Hilda bad always had an overwhelming desire to penetrate the mystery of the spare room, but all the information she could obtain from her husband was that he kept it fitted up in that manner in order that he might be able to entertain an angel if one called upon him unawares. - Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

MRS. COBDEN-SANDERSON.

The Noted English Suffragist Who Has Recently Been In America.

The recent visit in this country of revived anew the subject of woman on the 1st dayof September, 1908. suffrage, a subject never exhausted iq the press and the school debating soclety. The late disturbance in the British parliament when the women suffragist delegates were unjustly dealt with brought about a great deal of discussion and incidentally many facts pointing to the farreaching effects of the movement.

As far as the American woman and suffrage are concerned, there is nobody in this day and hour who will stop to question and argue about her right of suffrage, for the real question is about how long will it be before she gets it. About Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson a

She wishes to make converts, and as she is likely to become the fashion her talks were given chiefly at the fashionable literary clubs, where all she said was greeted with amused appreciation and a light ironical tolerance. The profound sincerity of her ideas did not deeply move her accomplished audiences, who indeed discuss ed the charm of her accent, the quaint beauty of her face, the unusual grace of her personality, but who said little or nothing about her message. She was pronounced charming, but she was not regarded as the daughter of the great commoner making a further plea for the rights and duties of com-
