THE TREATY TREE.

Where Penn and the Delaware Chiefs Exchanged Tokens.

The "treaty tree," the original American Hague, where our first peace congress was held, with William Penn on the one side and the Delaware chiefs on the other was a mighty elm that Land Office at Lakeview, Oregon. August 12, 1908. Notice is hereby given that EDWIN stood at Shackamaxon, on the banks of the Delaware river. Kensington, one of the suburbs of Philadelphia, now surrounds the spot.

> As was customary on such occasions, the parties to the treaty exchanged belts of wampum, and the belt said to to have been given Penn on this occasion is now in the collection of the Pennsylvania Historical society. It consists of eighteen strings of black and white bends, and in the center are two figures, representing a European and an Indian, with hands joined in friendship. In exchanging tokens with the chiefs Penn said:

"The friendship between you and me I will not compare to a chain, for that might rust, or the falling tree Department of the Interior, U. S. might break. We are the same as if Land Office at Lakeview, Oregon, one man's body were to be divided into two parts. We are all one flesh and Notice is hereby given that ELMER blood." When the Indians handed HOWARD, of Lakeview, Oregon, who, on July 14, 1908, made Timber and said:

[Original.] Ensign Schuyler Noble, attached to United States battleship Prairie, was In trouble. Prairle was not the name of the ship. It wouldn't do to give her real name, for she was named in honor of one of the western states and the partles to this story might be identified. Nor was Noble the name of the ensign, nor are any of the names here given real names. But that has nothing to do with the story. Noble was in a fix, the most usual fix in the world for a sallor-he had too many girls. He had only two, but it is a question if a dozen might not be more readily managed than two. If the two had been in different ports the problem might have been simpler, but they were not. They were-that is, for the present-in the same port, and that was where the Prairie had just been launched.

Lucy Archibald's right and title, so far as priority goes, were indisputable. She and Noble had been classmates at the high school where Noble had prepared for the Naval academy and had become involved in a case of puppy Every one wondered how Noble love. could fancy her, for she was a triffe Lakeview, Oregon, could fancy her, for she was a triffe Lakeview, Oregon, 25--10 J. telling him about his superfluity of girl. Mansfield told him to take in his distress signal, apparent on his countenance, and try to find some way out of the dilemma.

named had presented the ship with a complete set of silver tableware, and as soon as the vessel slid out into deep water and the shouting and the firing were over invited guests went below to partake of a luncheon at which this service was used. Now, the captain had commissioned Mansfield to have lookouts at the gangways and otherwhe take precautions that no thieves come aboard with the guests to get away with valuables. Mansfield took such steps to protect property as he deemed effectual.

A salute of champagne corks follow ed the guns fired on shore, and the guests fell to in disposing of the daintles prepared for them, after which they passed up the companionway to the deck, where they strolled about or stood chatting in groups. Lucy Archibald had captured Ensign Noble, who was promenading with her, and instead of looking happy the "union down" floated plainer than ever from his masthead. The girl insisted on taking him back and forth past the admlral's party, where Miss Tryne saw them, wondered and wrapped herself in a mantle of cool dignity. It was about this time that something happened. There were aboard a number of maidservants, dressed in the conventional livery of black dresses and white ruffled aprons, whose ostensible duties were to serve the indies. Suddenly Noble saw his friend Mansfield come up the companionway with one of these maids and point to his companion, Lucy Archibald. The maid advanced and said to Lucy in a low voice.

"I have to trouble you for the spoon." "What spoon?"

"The one you took from the officers' mess.'

"Qh," said Lucy, coloring, "I wanted It for a souvenir."

People were tooking when she opened a vanity bag hanging from her wrist and, taking out a silver spoon marked "U. S. S. Prairie," surrendered it to the maid

Now, there was a part of this story that Lieutenant Mansfield did not. at least at the time, tell Ensign Noble. Knowing of the mania among ladies even of apparent respectability to take articles for souvenirs, he had engaged "Come, come," cried the brusque and several women detectives, dressing them in maids' uniforms to watch. After the luncheon they interviewed privately the ladles they had caught pll-"I-I don't pay rent," replied the fering and recovered a couple of dozen spoons and other small articles belonging to the ship's new service. Mansfield in order to extricate his friend from his double girl dilemma had made a public example of Miss Archibald, leaving Noble to consider her a thief. The other cases Noble was not informed of

Even had Noble really loved the girl "Oh, George," sighed the lovesick it is doubtful if he would have remained engaged to her after this enisode. At any rate, next morning Miss Archibald received a note from him breaking the engagement, and his captain. coached by Mansfield, ordered htm away on special duty, so that the souvenir girl, as she came to be called. couldn't get him again into her clutches

When the Prairie went into commission, Mansfield and Noble both being among her officers, Mansfield totd his friend that Lucy was no more of a thief than a considerable number of others of the guests, but by this time Noble had found a new anchorage in the admiral's family, and it was too may have done his former fiances BEATRICE TOCKER
