* San Francisco Letter *

San Francisco, Jan. 1, 1909. Lake County Examiner.

San Francisco turned itself loose, last night, and that means you know, that there was something doing. As one viewed the great, pushing, rollicking, good natured crowd, surging along the great thoroughfare Market Street, it was impossible not to admire the splendid energy and pluck, backed of course by Eastern capital which has displayed since the most appalling disaster this American Continent has ever witnessed. Markt Street was ablaze for miles with strings of electric lights. The high buildings were illuminated from top to bottom. There was a procession of automobiles, miles in length, decked and trimmed in every conceivable design and color. The Chinese decorations were marvels of taste and bewildering colors. In Elder's Music Building there was music on every foot. One could hear the wonderful technique of Rubenstein, blended with the discordant sounds of thousands of tin horns, and blaring cow bells in the crowded streets. Now and then some little miss, pretty as a picture, would throw a handful of "confetti" in one's face, no one resenting it, all laughing and good natured with the true carnival spirit—out for a good time. The policeman stood around with nothing to do, for

KILLED THE MEDICINE MAN

Er. Joe, a Pitt River medicine man, was killed the 3rd inst near Alturas, by Charl Preston, an educated young Indian, because the doctor, who claimed a niece of Preston's had a big snake in her stomach, had failed with his charms to relieve her. The child had pneumonia. The young fellow is now in jail in Alturas. It seems that the shooting was the result of an old tribal law, wherein should a doctor fail to "make good medicine," he should straightway be killed by the nearest kin to the deceased. This is the second Indian doctor who has gone to the happy hunting grounds the past six months for failure to cure.

Wet or Dry

Our neighbors over the line in Modoc county, Calif., are going to vote "wet or dry" in February. They are wet now, and a desperate effort will be made to make irrigation an operative law there. The county board refused to submit the question unless some one would guarantee all the expenses of the election, which was promptly tendered by Hon. W. T. Cressler.
