LONDON'S BIG PAGEANT

Frank Lascelles Tells How It Will Be Arranged.

WHOLE CITY TO BE HIS STAGE

Twenty Thousand Actors Will Help to Make Great Spectacle in British Capital a Success, Says Pageant Maker-Twenty-one Scenes in All.

Imagine, if you will, a painting so great that every drop of color is the size of a man and of which the frame is the world's greatest city. Surely the artist must be he of whom Kipling wrote, who can "splash at a ten league canvas with brushes of comets' hair." But when the suggestion was made to Frank Lascelles, who recently sailed for London to arrange the greatest pageant in the history of the world, so far as that history has been traced, he actually flushed. An artist to his finger tips, he seems to think only of his work and not at all of the tremendous personal compliment implied by his selection to produce the pageant to be given in 1909 by the city of London to raise money for King Edward's hospital fund. It might even be suspected that the prospective profit to the fund arouses but slender enthusiasm in Mr. Lascelles' breast. It is the wonderful picture that he is to paint with human pigments that he thinks of—a picture covering the story of Great Britain's development, from the time that the Britons painted themselves with woad and lived in bushes up to the moment of the celebration of Queen Victoria's jubilee.

A full month will be occupied in the presentation of the twenty-one scenes, and 20,000 persons or more will be employed in the processions and panoramas. As to the cost "I have never thought," said Mr. Lascelles to a reporter of the New York Globe. "It is safe to say that a million dollars will be expended. That is a very, very conservative estimate, and that moderate sum is only made possible by the fact that not one person of all those engaged will receive direct or indirect compensation. The greatest artists, musicians, historians and archaeologists of all England are giving their services free."

It was to Mr. Lascelles' genius the wonderful history pageants at Quebec in celebration of her tricentennial were due. He it was who staged the Oxford pageant. The other day he gave freely of his time to the Lake Champlain centennial commissioners, who plan a magnificent pageant there next year. "What is your plan of operation as you have sketched it for the London pageant?" he was asked.

"We began early," he said. "As soon as I accepted the invitation to take charge of this pageant I asked the co-operation of the city of London. The lord mayor called the mayors of the twenty-eight separate towns that make up London together. Every one of them pledged himself and his city to the aid of the project. In effect they placed no bounds upon me."

"Before I left London last November I had started the machinery in operation. I had appointed committees on art and music and the archaeological details and on finance. The leaders of thought in each line are represented on these committees. Sir Thomas Elgar is on the music committee. The most eminent English artists are on the committee on art. "Organization, organization, organization—that is the key to success in a project of this sort. Without organization, effective down to the last man in the least group, we should be helpless. Each committee knows precisely what it is to do. No committee has aught to do with the work of any other committee."

"As an example of the plan of organization I may say that, first and last, 20,000 persons will be used in the pageant. These are divided into sections and divisions and subdivisions and groups and subgroups. In the end I can put my hand on any man I want in any group without the possibility of misunderstanding or delay."

"The pageant plan is a comprehensive one. We aim to make England's history a living thing to every spectator. We will begin with the ancient Britons, the man of prehistoric days, the man who drifted from coast to coast in coracles and worshipped strange, savage gods. So far as the science of modern archaeology has made it possible we will absolutely reproduce that man and his workings and his villages and his life. Then we go on, taking in turn each of Great Britain's conspicuous historical epochs. Each scene will represent a different epoch. The average man doesn't know his history. He doesn't know the romance and the glory and the tragedy of it. A name means hardly anything to him. But we hope to make his England appear before his eyes as a living entity as she emerged from barbarism into light. "The great kings and queens of the past will be seen, each in the surroundings typical of their times. May day scenes in an English village will be presented simply as an incident to one phase of history. Here we will reproduce with absolute fidelity the costumes of the early English villager, his habits and his traditions. The songs he sang will be sung again, and the strange, quaint, ineffably picturesque Morris dances—dances that have today been almost forgotten—will be danced before our modern eyes as they were in the England of English Harry's time. "And so we pass on from king to king, from epoch to epoch, until we come to Queen Victoria. Her coronation will be presented, but not the queen herself. These things will be made possible only by the co-operation of the greatest men and the greatest minds in England. A dozen times would not be sufficient to assimilate the vast bulk of intimate knowledge required for these twenty-one pictorial representations. But I can draw from England's best brain, taking from each its drop of knowledge, and in the end have the sum of all human knowledge pertaining to these things. "One should not forget the social value of these spectacles," said Mr. Lascelles in parting. "They are absolutely democratic. No account is taken of rank in the selection of actors. A carter may represent a king; a marquis may be a dancing villager. I remember that at the Oxford pageant—you know that there is a certain rivalry between the towns of Oxford and the university—the people of the seven displayed a desire to play the kings and queens and nobles. So the men and women of the university took the other tack. They went on in the mob scenes, appearing as simple villagers, while their grocers and butchers posed in gilded crowns."

The Useful Onion.

Half a freshly cut onion briskly rubbed over marked and spotted velvet will restore it to beauty if the velvet be directly afterward gently rubbed with a damp soft linen cloth and passed across a hot flatiron standing upright.

For dyeing specked or faded cotton goods a pretty dark ecru or light brown take two red onions and a big handful of onion peels and boil them briskly for one hour in a quart of water, then strain and in the colored water thus obtained boil your goods slowly for three hours. Rinse in several waters. Onion juice makes a strong adhesive for pasting paper, such as labels, etc. on tin or other metals.

The juice of fresh cut onion stems rubbed on insect stings and mosquito bites will when immediately applied prevent redness and swelling.

Onion juice mixed with good pure vinegar inhaled through the nose will stop nosebleed. Slices of fresh cut onion applied to the back of the neck help along the cure.

This is just the time of the year when you are most likely to have kidney or bladder trouble, with rheumatism and rheumatic pains caused by weak kidneys. Delays are dangerous. Get De Witt's Kidney and Bladder pills, and be sure you get what you ask for. They are the best pills made for backache, weak back, urinary disorders, inflammation of the bladder, etc. They are antiseptic and act promptly. We sell and recommend them. Daly & Hall.

Quite often the work on the farm can be given a new interest for the growing and inquisitive boy through the purchase of a good piece of labor saving machinery, such as a stationary or traction engine, which he will be glad to get acquainted with and operate for the pure amusement which it affords. Another boy of a somewhat different turn of mind would have his interest in things on the farm renewed by the purchase of some kind of thoroughbred stock. In the care of which he should have some financial interest.

Plat. 2. Loosely at Night.

At night a little girl's hair should never be lightly curled or platted if you want it to grow thick and long, but be very loosely done in two plaits, so that in the morning there are practically no tangles to be combed out. What does it matter if she doesn't look particularly pretty? So long as children are healthy and happy that is the great point, and it is far better for a girl to have straight hair in nursery days than to have no hair at all or only very skimpy locks when she grows to womanhood, a quite possible result of overmuch curling and curling. Do all you can to make it grow and don't bother about kinks, and you will earn your child's gratitude not only while she is in the nursery, but all her life long.
