DRY LAND FARMING IN EAST OREGON

Agriculture is a progressive science. Nature not only presents compensation for incurable deficiencies in certain sections of the country, but also seems to hold in reserve unexpected possibilities of development that are valuable when the human family needs an increased area for crop cultivation.

The Western states have given the world a spectacle of general development so rapid as to be almost startling in its realization. The first migration westward pushed out to the mineral districts or to the humid coast belt, esteeming the "Great American Desert" as unhabitable and consequently worthless. Cross the "desert" now on any one of the transcontinental trails and try to imagine what transformation has been wrought. It was under the magic power of irrigation that things first began to change. In certain instances the seemingly impossible has been accomplished. Water lifted from ancient river beds has been carried for ten miles, twenty or thirty miles to slake the thirst of the parched land and cause its luxuriant growth to appear in the smiles of nature enthroned in the midst of green fields and in the fragrance of fruit and flowers.

But irrigation is almost an old story, surpassed in a new wonder of the west known as "dry farming." The name of this most recent agricultural science is at once a misnomer and a fairly descriptive title. It is not an abstract proposition nor difficult to understand. Like irrigation, dry farming is simply an operative common sense applied to given conditions. It has been discovered that an average annual rainfall of eleven inches is sufficient for successful crop production if that moisture is conserved in the soil. The truth of this proposition has been thoroughly demonstrated by continued agricultural success for a score of years at various places in Utah, and notably in the vicinity of Panguitch, Ore. The three prime essentials of such success are summer tillage, cropping a certain piece of ground only in alternate years, and light seeding. These truths were not discovered in a day. They are the product of experience. Finally they were collected in a system and there appeared the science of dry farming.

Eastern Oregon, with a normal annual rainfall of sixteen inches, is at present the most interesting field for the demonstration of the possibilities of dry farming. Land hitherto providing only a precarious existence for range stock is easily made to produce 30, 40, or 50 bushels of grain per acre while potatoes, corn and other crops are usually successful.

Dry farming is not the successor to irrigation. They are kindred and coordinate sciences, often working side by side in the same locality. The individual and aggregate results undoubtedly mean the complete reclamation of Eastern Oregon and the building of thousands of new homes on these vast stretches of fertile lands.

A SMALL PLACE.

Great Success of a Four Acre Farm Managed by a Woman.

Successful women farmers are no longer a novelty, numbers of them being found in all sections of the country. Possibly the smallest farm that has provided a living for its owner is carried on by Mrs. Jane C. Barrow of Connecticut. This energetic lady has succeeded in obtaining a living for herself and two children on the profits of a four acre farm, sending the children to school meanwhile.

The enterprise was started without capital seven years ago. Mrs. Barrow being forced to incur debt to pay for groceries and supplies until the farm returns began to come in. Bees, small fruits and poultry were the foundation. Only one acre of the four was suitable for planting, and this acre has really brought in most of the income by means of a system of intensive farming which is remarkable, to say the least. One-fourth of this acre was devoted to poultry, and last year 2,000 ducks were raised and sold at a weight of four pounds each when between three and four months old. The feather crop alone amounted to 400 pounds.

On this acre of tillable land, besides the ducks, were 100 fowls, 24 turkeys, 50 pairs of pigeons and 75 stands of bees. Pigeons were a profitable specialty, about 400 pairs of squabs having been sold. Ducks, however, are considered more profitable than pigeons, and Mrs. Barrow thinks of disposing of the pigeons and increasing the duck area. The turkeys also pay well. The white variety is kept because the feathers are more valuable. The birds are sold during the holiday season and, being especially well fattened, bring the very highest prices. The bees are an excellent investment, and Mrs. Barrow considers the work pleasant and suitable for a woman. Bees pick up their living in the summer, but receive some extra feeding in winter.

Of course the large supplies of food needed for the poultry are not raised on the farm. They are bought outside at considerable expense. Mrs. Barrow hesitates to buy more land, having made such a success on a small area. She is firmly of the opinion that a common mistake made by women who take up farming is to begin on too large a scale.

THE NEGLECTED ELDERBERRY

It is Really a Wholesome and Delicious Fruit.

Of the wild fruits few are more delicious than elderberries. Our forefathers, who had to depend upon the wild fruits alone when the country was new, learned many arts that seem almost forgotten in these later days, and one of them was the use of elderberries. They gathered them, stemmed, washed and packed them in deep earthen jars until within three inches of the top and then filled the jar with Orleans molasses. The berries kept in this way, too, and made delicious pies through the long, bleak winter, when good things were scarce. Another way, which some of us remember, was to dry them in the sun, and this, too, gave many an appetizing dish that otherwise would have been forever lacking. Somehow the pioneer woman found her greatest joy in providing good things for her family. One wonders if the women of today who have "careers" know as much real happiness as did the pioneer women of fifty years ago. But elderberries still grow, and they are still good. Let the boys gather some and try an elderberry pie.

Make a rich crust and pinch it up high around the edge, so that the pie will not be, as some one said, "all fence and no pasture." Fill it with the clean berries, add a tablespoonful of good vinegar and a teaspoonful of sugar into which a tablespoonful of flour has been stirred. Cover with a top crust and bind the edges together with a strip of cloth, or some of the rich juices will be lost sure. Bake forty minutes. A delicious sauce can be made with apples and elderberry juice, or a jelly can be made in the same way. Cook apples and berries together, one part of berries to three or four of apples. Strain the juice and cook as any other jelly. Elderberry juice is a fine addition to grape juice, both because of flavor and medicinal qualities.

Potted Strawberries.

At this season of the year there are always a number of inquiries with regard to potted strawberry plants. The idea is that extra strong plants can be grown by plunging pots into the ground and setting the young plants into these while still attached to the mother plants. These potted nurseries are then transplanted to permanent beds in August or September and are expected to yield a crop the following year. Practically one year is thus saved in the production of a strawberry crop. The value of this method can be pretty accurately set forth in a dozen words. It is interesting play for amateur gardeners, but has no standing in commercial strawberry culture. It is never undertaken on a commercial scale. But in small gardens, where the fun of growing things is equal to the market price of the produce, fall planted potted strawberry plants may be cordially recommended. These facts account for the annual appearance of the potted plant fever in the amateur horticultural journals. The scheme is suited perfectly to those who have not yet progressed beyond the reading of such magazines. Unfortunately, however, these amateur horticultural periodicals very seldom warn their credulous readers that the idea is of no commercial value, and so from year to year, along with a small crop of strawberries, there flourishes a large crop of needless disappointment.
