Hunting the Lion

By Frederick R. Toombs

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE African lion is the greatest hunting prize on earth. British army officers may discuss the thrill of their shooting in the Bengal jungle, and other men may discuss the thrill of the elephant shooting found in the Congo Free State, but the slayer of a full grown lion in all the majesty of his ferocious power is the envy of them all, secret though it may be. It is acknowledged by big game trackers that no man can become a king of hunters until he has pursued and slain the king of beasts in his own domain.

In choosing the Uganda plateau as his principal hunting field Mr. Roosevelt hit on one of the most dangerous lion haunts known, for this section of British East Africa has thus far escaped the devastating operations of insatiable Nimrods who have practically depleted of big game much of the South African region and a large part of the Kongo and British Sudan. Lions are also plentiful east of Uganda, on the Athi plains, along the Athi river and in the great Rift valley, British East Africa, which general section the Roosevelt party contemplates visiting en route to Uganda.

The white hunters, or "guns," and their gun carriers have been stationed in open patches toward which the drive is aimed. Crouching at separate points in the brush, they anxiously await the approach of the desired game, for lions and other animals are afraid of the noise and retreat before it, thus being forced close to the marksmen. Great danger here arises for the hunters not only from the lions, but from the cross fire of the different guns aimed at plunging animals from different angles. Stray bullets from a 35 autoloader or a 40 Express rifle are not pleasant visitors.

Quickest thought and action and surest aim are here required as a lion comes bounding through the thicket. Usually more than one well directed shot must be fired before a lion drops. Frequently the beast advances on a hunter after four or five balls have struck him in seemingly vital spots. Ragging from pain, he springs upon his enemy and in convulsive death struggles kills him if the native gun bearer has not the courage and skill to stand by and dispose of the beast without injuring the struggling hunter. When a lion is shot and lies as dead the natives never allow any one to approach the body until they have thrown sticks and stones at it repeatedly without response, for the treacherous beasts yards of the right hand bush, when Elmi suddenly seized my arm, pointing the rifle he carried into the base of the bush and hissed: "See! See! The lion! Shoot him! Spring!" "Once more I must admit that I could see nothing. Strain my eyes as I would, I could distinguish nothing like a lion in that bush. I decided rather recklessly, and perhaps from some sense of shame that a black man should be so superior in eyesight, to fire. There was no mistaking the response—a growl more savage than I ever had heard in my life before. I also saw through the thick smoke the electric convulsion with which the beast pulled itself together for a spring. The movement disclosed the position of the head and shoulder, and I put the second bullet well in behind the shoulder. The beast, still growling, but mortally sick, crawled out beyond. I now saw it was a lioness. Elmi handed me the 45, and a third bullet, raking forward from the stern, stretched her among the grass.

"While rushing forward to examine the beast and in the excitement of the moment utterly forgetting the second lion in the other bush, now behind us, I was promptly reminded by shouts and two rapidly fired shots in that direction. Turning round, I was just in time to see this beast, also a lioness, bound out toward me, a yellow streak from the thick covert, growling and snarling. I remember seeing her white teeth as she commenced another growl—but that movement was her last. A Paradox ball on the shoulder dropped her from our sight.

"While Elmi and I were thus occupied we had heard several rifle shots away on our right. It now transpired that a third lioness had also been secured by the 'guns' who had gone off in that direction. All three lionesses were dragged out of the covert by our boys and laid in a row on the grass outside, where a scene of indescribable excitement ensued, the niggers dancing and jumping around the dead beasts to an accompaniment of shrieks, beating of tom-toms and other fearsome instruments, including biscuit tins.

In the open the hunter continually uses his powerful fieldglasses in seeking game, and at times he discovers a lion that may be approached by means of bush stalking—that is, by warily stealing close enough to him to secure a shot. But to insure success the animal must not be disturbed, and annoying difficulties arise. The shifting winds and numerous small fowl and animals that start up noisily from underfoot serve to warn the intended prey. By getting so that the wind blows from the lion toward the hunter, or nearly so, the animal does not detect the hunter's scent, but the variable African breezes frequently put the hunter to windward, and the lion quickly discovers his enemy's presence. Bush stalking is usually employed in antelope hunting.

Deep ravines are a favorite shelter of lions during the rainy seasons. Outlying rock kopjes around the mountains of Uganda are during these seasons also popular retreats. The lions lie outside their caves by day on shelves of rock and have two outside beds, so that when the overpowering midday sun makes one bed too hot they change to the other, so chosen as to be more shaded at that period. In the dry season they find enough shelter in the grass and reed beds or among the heavy canes. When the lions are out of their rocky diurnal lairs and in the open veldt pursuit of them is greatly assisted by having capable mounts on hand—mounts the tsetse fly has overlooked. Lions, finding that they cannot catch or escape from horsemen in the open, will crouch, awaiting attack, and thus afford a target.

Veteran hunters have learned to watch other animals during lion hunts for indications of the latter's presence. For instance, if a herd of grazing antelopes is divided, the divisions feeding on both sides of an open stretch of favorable ground, they often find that the open space is a zone through which a lion's scent is blowing, denoting the beast's close presence to windward. Mounted Somali warriors are often used to scout the rolling country for lion tracks.

East African lions show a marked animosity to mounted men, arising probably from the advantage given by the horse's speed. They will attack mounted men when unmolested and when the circumstances would warrant their avoiding unmounted men until attacked. Recently a few miles north of Lake Issi, which Mr. Roosevelt will pass, a lion sprang from a clump of bushes upon a mounted English army officer and a companion, threw the officer and his pony to the ground, breaking the pony's back, and then killed the other man, tearing away his face. The Englishman killed the lion with two hollow pointed lead slugs from a 40 Express.

Hunters often trace lions by means of the muddy odor of places where the beasts have stayed for a period, but sometimes they are gravely deceived by an aromatic shrub that fills the air with an odor practically indistinguishable from lion scent.

As a lion when unable to finish its prey at one meal often returns to it the following day, this habit is sometimes taken advantage of when a freshly killed animal bearing a lion's marks is discovered. A trap gun is set, arranged by attaching a piece of string to the trigger of an ordinary rifle in such a way that the lion in attempting to reach its anticipated meal strikes the connection, causing the rifle to go off. The gun is arranged so that the lion will invariably receive its contents. While the trap gun rarely kills the game, it gives notice to the hunters and wounds the beast.

THE MONARCH OF EAST AFRICA

As many as 3,000 natives a year have been killed by the lions and lionesses of Uganda and its neighboring regions, and the number of whites thus lost—laborers, railroad employees, officials, residents, soldiers and hunters—is by no means inconsiderable. The grim death roll of the jungle beasts is no respecter of persons.

All the asharis (trained native hunters) of the safari, or expedition, are usually called into active service in lion stalking or lion driving, for the speed, strength, resisting powers, ferocity and resourcefulness of the jungle monarch render necessary all the opposition that can be mustered.

In a river or lake region, of which there are many in Uganda, it is customary to seek the lion along the water's edge early in the morning, where he attacks the various kinds of antelopes when they come down to drink. The curious spectacle is here often presented of a large herd of wildebeest (a species of gnu) being led to water by a graceful, shapely hartbeest. The wildebeest is an inferior animal and the guide herds to the water at which he and himself feed. The wildebeests assemble at a certain spot on the plain, and at the proper time the pilot steps off in the lead, as proud and as conscious as a much emulated colonel on dress parade.

If lions are not discovered in the reed and flag beds (finger-tines) along the river, and there is reasonable certainty that they are in the immediate vicinity, a drive is organized in the following manner: The asharis and such other natives as have been brought along, equipped with their native musical instruments—drums and tom-toms, supplemented by biscuit tins and sticks, gourd filled with stones, etc.—spread out in a long line, say half or three-quarters of a mile distant. Now, making all the noise possible, they advance toward the water, beating the have a habit of "playing possum," pretending to be dead and springing fiercely on those who draw near.

Mr. Abel Chapman, noted African hunter and explorer, in his latest book, "On Safari," describes an exciting Uganda lion drive and its results in part as follows:

"I was on the left of the line of 'guns' facing the lake. I was lying hidden in long grass about 100 yards from the covert, and the noisy line of beaters had already approached within half a mile when my Somali gun bearer, Elmi Hassan, who was lying beside me, pointed into the woods, saying: 'See! Two lions! You no see? I certainly did not see. They were not easy to detect, so low and stealthy was their advance. As the lions were completely inclosed, I would not risk the uncertain shot they now offered. At a point exactly on my front the two beasts lay down in two green bushes that grew within a dozen yards of each other beneath the last straggling trees.

CAMPING OUTFIT

We furnish the most complete Camping Outfit for the money ever offered to the public

We have made preparations to furnish the Government and all dealers and sellers of tracts of land as well as hunting, fishing and mining parties with a light-weight and convenient camping outfit. Being in a position to furnish this outfit at first cost we are able to give our customers the benefit of low prices. This complete outfit, consisting of a canvas tent, 7x7 ft., made of 8 oz. duck; a camping outfit for cooking, etc., consisting of 21 pieces.

The Tent and Campers Outfit go in a Trunk. We fill the balance of this trunk with a tray which holds blankets and wearing apparel, condensing a traveler's baggage so that he can check everything necessary on his ticket and have no excess baggage. The total cost of this entire outfit is $15.00. Terms: $5.00 with the order, $5.00 before the shipment of the goods from our factory. The total payment of $5.00 can be paid to the express company, C. O. D., "with privilege to examine." Total weight 83 lbs. Where a party of four people go together they are buying one cooking outfit, two trunks and two tents. All orders will be filled in regular order, as received.

The opening of the Oregon Military-Road Grant at Lakeview (of the Oregon Valley Land Company) will take place September 9th.

Thousands of people from all parts of the United States will attend this affair which will be the greatest land opening ever held in the United States. Lakeview is destined to become one of the great commercial centers of our country, immense preparations are going on to take care of the vast multitude that is going to assemble there in September. Not a single room, house or store can be rented for shelter or for any other purpose as many people who intend to be present at the opening have taken all the room available for sleeping purposes.

The climatic conditions in Southern Oregon are such that people can live outside in the open while here.

The General Agent of the Oregon Valley Land Company advises us that it is best to make ample preparations for this occasion, as those not used to outdoor life would find it a great hardship to sleep in the open. Residents of Lakeview advise us that to live in a tent in a regular camping way will answer all purposes. We advise you, if you intend to be present at the opening, to prepare yourself in every way possible.

By having such a camping outfit you will save a great deal of money which otherwise you would have to spend for sleeping room and living, which will only be available to a lucky few.

Up to the present time we have taken orders for a great many of these outfits for people who will go to Lakeview. These outfits are not made up except to order, so if you wish to avail yourself of the opportunity of getting one of these light-weight camping outfits at such a reasonable price, you had better send in your order at once. On account of the orders received and coming in daily, we will be unable to fill your order earlier than thirty days from receipt of same.

Assuring you that you will be more than satisfied with this camping outfit, and that it will be of great service to you, we beg to remain, Yours very truly,

Women Who are needed

Those attractive women who are attractive in the face, form and temper are the envy of many, who might be like them. A weak, sickly woman will be sickly and irritable. Constipation or kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. For all such Electric Bitters work wonders. The regulate stomach, liver and kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth velvety skin, lovely complexion. Many charming women owe their health and beauty to them. 50c at A. L. Thornton's.
