JUSTICE IN CONTEMPT. Stephen A. Wise in the July Pacific Monthly, under the caption of "Justice and the law," gives a very timely presentation of the miscarriage of justice a condition now entirely too prevalent, notoriously the case in the matter of the trial of Calhoun, in which there is manifest a deplorable disposition of the time to provide sure and easy methods for escaping deserved penalty on the part of wealthy criminals, coupled with equally sure, swift punishment for the lesser lawbreaker unblest with worldly goods or honors.

In other words, a man's crime is judged solely in comparison with the length of his purse, in which neither law nor justice are at all considered by lawyers, courts or juries. In this connection he rightly and pertinently observes: "While we are a people of reverence for law, it must not be forgotten that such reverence may be forfeited, if it comes to be generally believed that the laws of the land are unjust. The waning reverence for the courts is not as serious a matter as would be the courts forfeiture of men's reverence. Most serious of all it would be if the courts should cease to deserve the respect of American citizenship and yet receive it. A significant token of the disparity between law and justice is the admission frequently made that a certain decision, it may be, or line of conduct, 'is not just, but it is the law.' And yet I do not hold the legal profession answerable for the lawlessness of injustice, seeing that lawyers, after all, are only the agents or instruments of the tendency of our age, which represents a hyperlegalistic conscience. The lawyer ought to be the lawmaker, the law-interpreter, the law-exponent, the law-elucidator when, in truth, the lawyer does much to evade, begot, connivance, evasiveness, the law."

Further on, with due discrimination, he says: "The discrepancy between law and justice is responsible for much of the lawlessness that obtains in the land. The truth embracing lawlessness is not of the sudden, sporadic, explosive kind but that lawlessness that is subtle, persistent, unobserved. Far more serious than the lawlessness of the so-called anarchist, who rebels against the law because it is law and because he thinks all law is oppressive, is the lawlessness of most men entrenched in power, cloaked with opportunity and pardoned in privilege, who break the law because it is just. The so-called anarchist, honestly believes in justice without law; the really lawless, though unobtrusive, anarchist of power and place, aims at law without justice. I count that tendency of our age anarchic which fails to rest all upon justice. Real anarchy may assume the guise of lawfulness. Justice and the law must move hand in hand, justice informing law and law incarnate of justice. Unjust laws are as truly anarchic as lawlessness."

In the minds of men not weighted down by legal verbiage, but strongly imbued with the sense of right, the quibbling of legal minds, to the former seems nothing more nor less than childish, if not downright evasion of all the principles of justice. Men of strong nature, with a vigorous and potential mentality like Roosevelt, believe in wiping away with one vigorous sweep of the broom all cobwebs of the law designed solely to confuse and confound the seeker of justice. Men not so endowed have criticised Mr. Roosevelt for his disposition to do these things, but men who believe in the principles of right and justice as handed down to man from Mosaic times, and down to the time of Him who gave to the world the "The Sermon on the Mount" cannot and will not tolerate the quibbling that prevents the administration of justice because of ability to buy the means of freedom from the natural purpose of law, to punish the guilty and defend the weak and innocent. In this connection Mr. Wise with fine feeling remarks:

I hold it one of the great many achievements of former President Roosevelt to have done much in the direction of importing a larger measure of justice in to the law, of seeking to make a law substantially just rather than technically correct. Again and again he has protested with his splendid power against law morality, that is, against the setting up of the law as the last and loftiest arbiter of morals. Herein he has been at one with the greatest moral teacher of the century, Tolstol, who deprecates the perplexity produced by the dual standard of legality and right. The important thing is not so much that we get new concepts of legal wrongs vigorously enforced, but higher concepts of moral right voluntarily realized.

WILL UNITE NORTHWEST. One hundred Californians, under the auspices of the California Promotion Committee and other organizations of the state, left San Francisco Saturday evening, June 12th, for a visit to the Alaska-Yukon Pacific Exposition on the most elaborately equipped train that ever travelled over any railroad. The eleven coaches and dynamo car were equipped with telephones and wireless telegraph, and had all the conveniences of a modern social club. The object of the visit was to cement closer the bonds of friendship between the states on the Pacific slope, and during the entire time of the trip the Californians were "boosting" the exposition, and working for closer commercial and political relations between all the seven states of this slope.

This visit fully demonstrated the desirability of a close union of all the Pacific slope states, which would be of great advantage to the whole district. The exposition was found to be of vast educational benefit, as it was an epitome of the industrial development of the empire west of the Rockies, and those who made the trip are strong in their desire to have every person in Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Oregon, California and Arizona, join with the people of Washington in making the fair the success it deserves to be.

The exposition is of the highest character in its display of the products of soil and factory, and of the arts and sciences, and is well worthy of a visit from that standpoint alone. The California Promotion Committee, and all those who went with it to the exposition, strongly urge upon all who are interested in the development of the Coast region to visit the exposition, thus lending their moral and financial support to the success of the effort to place the Pacific slope before the eyes of the world.

FIGHTING FOREST FIRES. Working along the line of securing the greatest results in protection against fire, with a minimum of expenditure, the Forest Service has decided to establish on the most advantageous points of the national forests in the west a series of lookout stations from which news of the breaking out of forest fires can be telephoned to forest officials. Since all these stations will command a view of the country for miles around, the work of detecting and extinguishing fires in their incipency will, by this plan, be greatly expedited, with the result that many thousands of dollars worth of valuable timber will be saved annually.

Heart to Heart Talks. By EDWIN A. NYE

A RARE LITTLE MAIDEN. Alice Whaley of San Diego, Cal., is thirteen years old and a chronic invalid.

It all happened at Ocean Beach last summer. Many people were battling in the surf. Little seven-year-old Bruce McKenzie was about to lose his life when, at great risk to herself, Alice saved him. Then, with rare discretion, she got the little boy to take hold of her long braided hair, and while he thus clinging she swam back with him to safety. For this unique rescue the trustees of the Carnegie hero fund shelled her out for a medal and $2000 besides for her education.

And the levity about the whole matter is the admiration of her friends has not turned the head of the brave child in lots. She is the same sweet simple child as before. Of course the newspapers have bothered her concerning interviews, and she talks naively of her future. She doesn't know whether she will be a great nurse like Florence Nightingale or a virtuoso. Listen: "I think perhaps we shall take some of the money and get a piano so I can take lessons. I play the violin, and piano lessons will help me. I have always thought I should like to be a trained nurse. It must be nice taking care of poor, sick people. But I don't know yet what I shall be."

Blessings on the lassie, with her fine innocence of the future! Alice studies at a convent and doesn't bother her head about the boys. She says: "We aren't allowed to look over the fence at ordinary people, to say nothing of looking at boys. Mother says I can't marry till I'm twenty-five years old. She says she was married at seventeen and that I must profit by her experience."

Concerning which one devoutly hopes that Alice Whaley at twenty-five may be as unspooled as she is at thirteen. Perhaps that is too much to expect. Whether this rare little maid shall some day respond to echoes on the concert stage, or whether her heroism shall minister to the sick and suffering in a great hospital, or whether her gracious, strong, pure soul shall bless a fortunate husband, or whether some brute shall marry her and break her heart, Alice Whaley, little heroine, deserves well of the years that are yet to be.

losses on the national forests are kept at a point where they are trivial when compared with the damage which would be caused were the lands contained in the national forests unprotected.

The smoke nuisance in the cities is responsible for $800,000,000 damage to merchandise, tarnishing of metals, injury to plant life, and greatly increased labor and cost of housekeeping. In addition 150,000 people die each year from tuberculosis. It is claimed that at least three fourths of these deaths are caused by smoke, which in this sense is a national pest. The worst of the matter is that all this loss of property and life is preventable, and because it is not, is due to the sordid commercial spirit of the age, which resents any attempt to compel the use of appliances to prevent smoke. It is very likely that an awakened public conscience will yet put a stop to this needless deplorable waste.

One thing that shows the absolute devilishness of the protective tariff, if carried beyond its legitimate purpose of protecting home industry, if needed, is had in the case of tea. The South Carolina tea industry produces 10,000 pounds a year. It never will amount to the value of a bill of beans to the nation. Yet, in order to protect that infant industry, the American people, who annually consume 100,000,000 pounds, are taxed 10 cents on every pound they consume! Isn't this the height of absurdity? Under such conditions applied to every article, is it at all surprising that the consuming public are beginning to wonder where they are at?

On the anticipated increase of prices that the proposed tariff legislation will provide suits of men's clothes heretofore selling for $20 have at one jump raised to $35. And so it is all down the line. Somebody pays the bill. Is it you, Mr. Voter?

HINTS FOR FARMERS. Corn For Work Horses. The Ohio experiment station has made public a test made in feeding corn and oats to work horses. The test was made by selecting three pairs of matured geldings. One horse in each pair was fed corn with clover and timothy hay; the other was fed oats with the same hay ration. The test was continued for forty-eight weeks. At the close there was little if any difference in the condition of the horses fed corn from those to which oats had been fed, and no difference was shown during the test.
