Home Course In Modern Agriculture

XVII.—The Farm Home

Convright, 1909, by American Press Association

HE farmer is more important and girls. The success of a farmer is not measured so much by the money se makes as it is by the happiness ne brings to himself and to his family. One of the surest ways of accomplishing this end is by making the home surroundings attractive. There is no place on earth where it in the middle of a weed patch that put in at a small cost, goes by the name of garden of are hidden behind such a thick jungle of trees that it is impossible to see in or

The first thing to consider is the house itself. It should be situated on the highest part of the bill on which the farm buildings stand. A"house need not be expensive to be homelike and convenient. Indeed, the most expensive houses are often the least homelike.

The starting point is the cellar. With but little additional expense this can be made the full size of the house. In this case the foundation walls should extend to the bottom of the cellar. The first course should be of hollow brick, laid end to end, and connecting with a tile drain on the lowest side. In this way seepage water will be kept out of the cellar. A cement floor is a great advantage and is inexpensive, since the coment need not be more than two or three inches thick.

The cellar should be divided into about four rooms. Hollow brick make good partition walls and at the same time help support the floor. One of the rooms may be used for vegetables, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF GOOSE LAKE one for fruit, milk and butter, one to New Pine truek, Oregon. All are cordially invited to attend he services. cistern can be located outside.

> For an ordinary sized family a hundred barrel cistern is about the right A partition of a double layer of filter brick, with gravel and charcoal packed between, should extend across it. The water is drawn out from the opposite side of the filter from that to which the pipe from the roof empties. In this way the water obtained is pure enough for cooking or drinking. A plentiful supply of soft water is a luxury that can be obtained so cheaply that no one can afford to do without it. Wood is still the cheapest and most satisfactory building material. In building the house the two extremes of size should be avoided. If the house is too small it will be crowded, while if too large it costs more and is harder to keep clean.

In arranging the rooms, convenience and ease of keeping in order are the chief considerations. The large are solemn "spare room," which wa opened only on state occasions, has largely given way to the bright, cheer ful living room with its bookenses and work and reading tables, which I *E.S. ORIENTAL CHAPTER, NO 5 LAKE. used every day and evening in the fore full moon and two weeks thereafter, in Masonic Hall, at 7:30 o'clock.

Visiting members are cordially invited.

Most farm homes are very poori, than his farm, and the most lighted. A kerosene lamp is dirty important crop he raises is smells bad and does not give very not corn nor hogs, but boys much light. A gasoline lamp is much better. Best of all is the acetylene gas system. After this is once installed it can be operated cheaply and will furnish an abundant supply of light.

The water system is another thing in which farmhouses are behind those in the city. There is scarcely a house in a town of any size but that is providis easier to have an attractive home ed with water and sewage systems. In than on the farm. > An air tight tank in the cellar is sometimes used to supply the pressure for a farm water system, but is rather expensive. The water can also be drawn from the elevated tank at the barn, if one is used there, the only disadvantage in this case being that citern water cannot be used on the whole, the most satisfactory plan by have a small galvanized tark in the attic. A little covering in the colder weather will keep it from freezing, at a few minutes work with the cister: pump cach day will keep it filled.

The laundry room downstairs is the place where the convenience of such a system will be appreciated most In this room the washing machine. tubs, wringer and other utensils can be kept. An opening in the floor connected with the tile drain will carry off the waste water, and hot and cold water from upstairs will be always on tap. Such a room, together with the entire water system, can be fitted up for less than $100.

Another convenience that can be in Lukeview, at the stalled at small cost is a sewerage sys- in the tem. This can be connected with the | will ell bathtub and sink, and with a small additional expense another luxury that is seldom found on the farm, an indoor 'closet, can be added. Drainpipe well cemented at the joints should be used in constructing the underground tank divided into four compartments, so arranged that when the first of these becomes full it will overflow into the second, and so on. The tank should be covered and provided with a ventilator. The action of bacteria in the septic tank will destroy all the solid matter, so that the water which flows out the lower end will be clear and have no objectionable odor. With an occasional cleaning out such a tank will last forever.

The house should be provided with plenty of porches. These increase the expense somewhat, but also add much to the comfort and appearance of the keep out the sun and screens to keep out the files make them still more comfortable.
