CREED MCKENDREE

C. H. MCKENDREE wishes to announce that his services are at the disposal of the purchasers of the land at the Oregon Valley Land Company's Sale in Oregon. For two years Mr. McKendree was rental agent, having charge of all the lands embraced in the Military Road Grant, which was put up and sold by the O. V. L. Co. In that capacity he familiarized himself with every tract of land on the grant, became acquainted with renters, and can tell you from personal knowledge the value of each and every tract, both as to location and quality, and rental value. In addition Mr. McKendree knows the stockmen and who rented every portion of these lands during the past two years—he knows whom to see to rent each tract this year. For a uniform fee of five ($5.00) dollars per tract regardless of size, Mr. McKendree will render a report giving location, quality and the value, and will find you a renter if the land is rentable. All requests for information must be accompanied by $5.00, otherwise no answer will be returned. REMEMBER, Mr. McKendree does not have to inspect the land, and render a "flat" look report; he has the books classifying every tract, and knows what it rented for last year—he has been over every foot of the ground, he can find you a renter.

I also wish to announce that I will attend to the payment of the taxes for all contract holders; group their lands for renting, leasing or selling for the period of one year from the 15th day of March, 1910, for a fee of $1.00 per contract. All contract holders wishing to avail themselves of his offer will mail to the undersigned a description of their tract and lot number, together with the fee above mentioned. Reference—Any bank or business man in Lakeview. Address C. H. MCKENDREE Lakeview, Oregon.

The Two Minute Fuse.

By WILLIAM WALLACE COOK.

Andy and Blakesly had settled it between them that the Dutchman was a thief. Andy had found a silver watch, and a few minutes with $5 in it and a diamond ring valued at $20 which he had found in a trunk. And, too, was a part of a sound sleep a few minutes before and had seen Fritz shuffle through the bunk house. When Andy failed to find his watch next morning there was but one inference for him to draw.

There in the end of the "drift" he and Blakesly figured the matter all out. In the afternoon Fritz was not only to be discharged, but also to see the inside of the Phoenix jail. Blakesly sat reflectively on the handle of his wheelbarrow. Andy threw down his drill, unwound a two minute length of fuse from the coil, scraped the end and slipped on a cap. He pushed the cap down into the hole and followed it with two sticks of dynamite, gently ramming them home and filling up the hole with dust.

"Great Scott!" exclaimed Blakesly. "You're putting in a charge for your life, Andy." "I'm going to blow out this horse and uncover the vein," returned the foreman. "If it takes a leg." Just then a burst of childish laughter echoed to them. "Is that Allie?" he asked. Allie was his daughter, a motherless, sunny faced child, who had been the especial protege of Mrs. Hurst, the keeper of the boarding house, ever since her father had brought her to the Pacolus mine. Occasionally Allie was allowed to come down into the workings, which was always a treat for her. She was a prime favorite, and every one of the miners would have guarded her as the apple of his eye.

"It must be Allie," said Blakesly, getting up and starting off. At that precise minute the noon whistle of the stamp mill sounded. "Take Allie up with you," Andy called after Blakesly. "All right," returned Blakesly, baiting at the shaft. The ladder was filled with climbing miners, Fritz at the lower end of the row. "Where's Allie, Fritz?" asked Blakesly. "She was gone oop alretty," answered Fritz, looking down. "Sure about that?" "Yah, sure. Kingman carried her out. I seen him myself."

All the miners of the day shift except Kingman and Andy were now on the ladder. Blakesly was satisfied and started nimbly up the greasy rungs. The foreman removed his tools to a place of safety, applied the flame of his candle to the end of the fuse, watched the fuse splutter for a moment and then made his way to the ladder and started for the surface himself. "Where's Allie?" asked Andy, springing out of the shaft and hurrying after Blakesly. "She came up with Kingman," replied Blakesly. "Who told you?" "Fritz."

The miners were straggling out singly and in couples on their way to the boarding house. Kingman was in the lead, walking alone. Fritz was just ahead of the foreman and Blakesly. "Hello, Kingman!" shouted Andy. "Where's Allie?" "Didn't she come up with you?" he asked. Every miner in the straggling line came to an abrupt halt. The very thought that Allie might still be below with a fuse lighted and leaping closer and closer to a terrific charge of dynamite was sufficient to set every heart pounding. There were other charges in the level, too, but they were light compared with the one in the breast of the tunnel.

Andy went white in a second. "You infernal villain!" he roared, springing upon Fritz and gripping him by the throat. Fritz tore himself loose and ran frantically back to the shaft. "Kingman vent past der slope mit Allie on his shoulder," he fung at them as he raced. "I did," cried Kingman, joining the rest as they socked excitedly after Fritz. "but she said she'd rather come up with her father, so I lowered her down the ladder again. Didn't you see her, Andy?"

"Oh, my God!" gasped the foreman and threw his hands to his face. "How many holes were loaded?" demanded Blakesly. "Three," said Higgins. "All two minute fuses?" "It was a useless question, for that was the standard length for the noon firing. Andy staggered against the framework of the "whim," his face ashen and his nerve completely gone. He could do nothing. "Perhaps she's coming up!" suggested Blakesly.

Another useless remark, for Allie could not have climbed the ladder if she had tried. Blakesly leaped on the platform to look down, but Fritz had already swung the ox hide or bucket over the shaft, had kicked the coil of rope into the depths and had gripped the strands convulsively. It was a time for action, not for words.

How many seconds of the previous 120 had already slipped away? The building of the level, the way the backward rush, the eddies, though all that must have consumed the time to the uttermost second. "She's not coming oop!" cried Fritz, and as he spoke he sprang into the bucket and dropped from sight. One glimpse of his wild, terror stricken face was all they caught, and then came the swirl of the rope and the click of the unrolled sheave. In a breath there followed the bump of the bucket at the bottom of the shaft, and the rope leaped upward and hung limp and slaking. Fritz came from below, a puff of bluish smoke curling upward above the platform planks. "One!" whispered Blakesly, drawing away from the choking powder. "Boom!" "Two!" gasped Higgins, holding his hat over his mouth and kneeling to peer downward. "Do you see anything—hear anything?" demanded Kingman hoarsely. Higgins turned a despairing face toward Kingman and shook his head. "Boom!" From under them came a sudden roar which seemed to rise the earth asunder. Kingman was thrown from his feet, and the others on the platform fung out their hands in an attempt to grasp something and support themselves. Up from the blackness rolled a billow of sulphurous fog. "Fritz was mad to go down there," said Kingman. "They're both lost. What are you doing, Blakesly?" Blakesly had jerked off his coat and was wrapping it about his head. "If they're not both done for now," he replied in muffled tones, "they soon will be if we don't get them up. Stand ready to man the whim rope when I shake it."

He crawled gropingly to the ladder and lowered himself. All watched the rope breathlessly. Finally, after a wait that seemed hours in duration, the signal was given, and stout hands drew the bucket to the surface. A little head lay against the bucket's rim, and a white childish face met the eyes of the men. Allie! Kingman took her out of the bucket. She was unconscious, but the miracle was that she did not appear to be hurt. Not a stone of all that flying debris had struck her. She was given into the eager, trembling arms of her father, who started at a run for the boarding house. Meanwhile the bucket had again been lowered. The signal from Blakesly was longer in coming than the first had been, and when the bucket was drawn up a second time it was found to contain Fritz—Fritz, bruised, torn and bleeding, his clothes all but stripped from his body. Tender hands lifted him to the platform and stretched his mangled limbs out on the rough planks. They thought he was dead, but his eyelids quivered unexpectedly and partly opened. "I was between Allie and der rocks," he whispered weakly. "She was in my arms and nodding touched her. It was my mistake, and it's all right, all right."

His spirit flickered and went out even as the "all right" faded from his lips. Blakesly had to be helped to the surface, for his work in the noisome vapor had told upon him. A few breaths of fresh air were all he needed, and when he had revived sufficiently he told how he had groped his way along the tunnel and had found Fritz lying among the splintered rocks, Allie clasped in his rigid arms, her body protected by his own. That afternoon Andy and Blakesly found a battered silver watch, an old pocketbook containing $5 and a gold nugget, all on the floor of the fifty foot level.

"That is exactly where Fritz and Allie were lying," said Blakesly. "Sh-h-h-h!" whispered the foreman, slipping the purse with its contents and the watch and nugget into his pocket. "Not a word about this, Blakesly, to any living man. Leave me to deal with the matter."

The following morning Baker was surprised to discover that his twenty dollar nugget was back in his trunk, and Higgins when he put on his best suit to go to Fritz's funeral found the pocketbook with the $5 securely stowed away in the breast of his coat. "Blamed if I didn't haul over everything in my trunk a dozen times looking for that chunk of gold," remarked Baker. "If it had been a snake it would have bitten me."

"I went through the pockets of all the clothes I've got hanging for that purse," spoke up Higgins. "And to think that we ever suspected Fritz!" "Think nothing but good of the dead, boys," said Andy, with feeling. "Come on! The minister is ready."

Abnormal Twilights. Twilight, which is normally due to the refraction of the sun's light by the atmosphere, is occasionally modified by other natural causes. Roxy glows in the west after sunset are particularly common in the vicinity of Bordeaux, France. These are not the usual sunset glows, but appear in the sky 45 degrees above the sun and are supposed to be due to reflection from high clouds too thin to be seen in ordinary light. The same invisible clouds may also cause abnormal prolongation of twilight, as on the first day of last July in this same region, where a watch could be easily read up to four minutes of 10 p. m., whereas on the following night it could be read only till a quarter past 9, a difference of forty-one minutes. Owing to the presence of the thin clouds above described these long twilights are of use to astronomers as an indication that the night will not be favorable for astronomical observations.—Philadelphia Record.

La Follette's Weekly Magazine

There are many reasons why you should read what it says 52 times each year. It is free to tell the truth. It will oppose the encroachment of special privileges upon the people's rights. It will call the roll on public men and measures and inform you how your congressmen work and vote. It will criticize the executive branch of government from the highest to the lowest, if in its judgment the people's interests are not protected. It will spread the gospel of ideal home life through the Women's Department. It will be conservative when good things are to be conserved, and radical when bad things are to be exposed. Senator R. M.
