THE

Methodist

His Method Was a Success, but It Remained a Secret.

In the early stages of the last century the Smiths—descendants of the famous "rat king"—lived in the building where the author is now writing. They ate skins cured with animal fat soup or table meat or the like, as Professor Henry's party without discrimination. Every one in the city from教授者 Henry to the poorest boy was subject in common, and that was "this."

As Professor Henry was living in the east end of the building, was destined to an acre or so of the roof brought in his home, telling that day Professor Specimen would wait to and said, just as it had been following every word of the family conversation, "I have just seen and that there is a man in Philadelphia who can rid this place of rats."

Professor Henry's eyes expressed interest and incredulity at the same moment.

"I have his address here," went on the assistant secretary. "He calls himself the 'rat king' and won't take a cent if a rat remains dead."

"We'll send for him if it takes our last thousand cents to do it," said Professor Henry and merrily predicted the repetition of the famous old tale of the Pied Piper of Hamelin.

Several days later the "rat king" appeared in Washington. He was almost as short as he was broad and wore clothes too loose for description; they had no shape. He carried a large oilcloth sack and a covered basket. His penetrating blue eyes were almost covered by shaggy eyebrows, and his blond hair had not been cut, but haggled. His manner was short and brisk, and he went straight to the point, talking to Professor Henry in German.

He declared that not a rat would be in the building three days hence if his directions were obeyed. During that time he would stay in the basement alone; every door was to be locked, and on no account was he to be disturbed until he gave them the signal. So they left him in absolute darkness and carried out his directions.

On Sunday morning the queer old man emerged from the darkness so confident of his success that he refused to accept the money which was due him then and there, but insisted that Professor Henry mail the check to him in Philadelphia the following week.

"Now you can leave your food in the basement, and it won't be touched. And I won't take a cent if you are troubled with rats," were his parting words.

Cheese and cake were directly placed about the building to tempt the rats. Morning after morning they were found as they had been left, and from that day to this the Smithsonian Institution has never been seriously troubled with rats. And no one has ever found out the secret of the "rat king's" method—Youth's Companion.

Washington's High Priced Shad.

Washington's steward was a man named Fraunee, who liked good living and with whom Washington continually quarreled about the marketing. One time he bought a shad in February, and as Washington saw it coming into the dining room he was charmed and asked what fish it was.

"It is a shad," replied the steward, "a very fine shad." It was the only one in the market, and I bought it for you."

"But what did you pay for it?" said Washington sternly.

"It is a very fine shad," continued the steward, "and it is cooked to a turn."

"But I want to know the price—the price!"

"It cost $3," stammered out Fraunee.

"Take it away," said Washington as he raised his hand; "take it away. It shall never be said that I set such an example of luxury and extravagance."

And with that he drove the steward out of the room, and the shad was eaten in the servants' kitchen.

She Liked Silk Hosiery.

Susie B. Anthony was a woman of simple taste. In dress, but her close friends knew of one pretty fondness which she always had to. She had a weakness for silk stockings, being pressed on one occasion for an explanation of what most women at one time regarded as an unnecessary extravagance. She laughingly explained, "Oh, I just love 'em. They are the inspiration. If I have no silk stockings when I rise to make an address I feel just as if I were walking among the clouds. They help me to soar away on flights of eloquence. I wouldn't be without them."

Just the Thing.

The poor boy has silver mounted pistol from the nurse's drawer.

"What do you mean to do with that?" asked his timid wife.

"The gun to use it to drive the wolf from the door," he answered.

Ten minutes later the pawnbroker had advanced $2 on it. Chicago News.
