LITTLE HIGH ROCK CANYON TRAGEDY
 Further Particulars of Terrible Murder of Stockmen

The Surprise Valley Record gives the following particulars of the terrible tragedy enacted last month at Little High Rock canyon:

The bodies of the murdered men were found as stated last week, lying in a ditch or bed of a creek, two of them lying side by side and the other two were piled on top of them, Indians being on top. They were frozen hard and it was with some difficulty that they could be separated. The bodies were carried on stretchers for a mile or more and placed on sleds and taken to Wm. Denio's residence, where they were examined and an inquest held, which resulted in the following verdict: "That Harry Cambron, Peter Erramouse, John Lagogue and B. Indiano, came to their death by gunshot wounds inflicted by parties unknown, but believed to be Indians."

The bodies were not mutilated, as at first reported, except that the upper lip and mustache of Peter Erramouse had been entirely cut away, it was thought they tried to remove the gold crowns from his teeth, but failed. It was found that John Lagogue had been shot only once, through the heart. Peter Erramouse was shot in four different places, as was also Harry Cambron, and Indiano was shot in three different places, indicating that there had been a battle.

The bodies were brought to Eagleville Friday evening, and on Sunday were interred in the cemetery at that place. Father O'Malley, of Lakeview, held services over the remains of John Lagogue and B. Indiano, and the two former were buried at 10 o'clock in the morning, and at 1 o'clock the body of Peter Erramouse was taken charge of by the Knights of Pythias and laid in its last resting place. At 3 o'clock p. m. the M. W. of A. lodge paid the last sad rites of fellowship to Harry Cambron, after the services at the M. E. church, conducted by Rev. G. W. Hall. It was a sad scene, and the "day of funerals" was laden with sorrow for the sad misfortune that had befallen our fellow citizens, and sorrow for the afflicted relatives.

Large numbers were present from all portions of the valley to pay the last tribute of respect to the murdered men, and it was probably the largest number ever gathered there to participate in the last sad rites of those who had passed over the dark river of death.

Diligent search was made at or in the vicinity of the place where the terrible tragedy occurred to ascertain if any evidence could be found that would give a clue as to who the murderers were, and all indications point to the fact that the horrible deed was committed by Indians. The place where the murderers had camped was found in a sheltered spot that could hardly have been seen from a casual observation. On the spot where the tepee had stood was found the combings of an Indian woman's hair, an Indian snowshoe completed and one about half finished. Leading from the tepee was a narrow path paved with stones and covered with sage brush bark, to a well barricaded spot, practically a fort, from which observations could be taken of all parts of the surrounding country, and it is said that a few men could have held a large body of men at bay for an indefinite length of time. It is from this place, it is presumed, that the ill-fated party were killed, and then dragged down the mountain side and piled in the creek. Seven horses were found dead, presumably starved to death. The overcoats, watches and much of the other garments of the dead men were missing and it is presumed that the Indians took them away; even the stockings of most of the dead men had been removed.

The Indians supposed to be implicated in the murder are renegades from the Idaho reservation and were seen near that part of the country by vaqueros during the months of November. The band then consisted of six men, three squaws and a couple of paposes, and it is thought that others might have joined them.

Sheriff Smith, of this county, Sheriff Ferrill, of Wasco County, Capt. J. P. Donnelly, and three of the Nevada State Police and Ben Cambron, with the following local men: Chas. Demick, Ed. Hogel, Henry Hughes, Wm. Carson, Geo. Reauer, Jack Ferguson, Sid Street, Fred Hill, Warren Fruit, Jim Baty, Gilbert Jackson and Mart West started out last Thursday on the murderers trail, and it is thought that they will soon be overhauled, although at this time of the year it is difficult to make much progress.
