Valley Falls Items

Shearing of the sheep belonging to Henderson & Rehart and Jonas Norin has commenced at the old Rehart corrals on Willow Creek.

Mrs. Stone, of Lakeview and this place, has accepted a position with the Valley Falls Mercantile Co., at their hotel here.

Rev. Young, of Paisley and Alkali Lake, passed through here recently on business in connection with the borax company who owns the property at Alkali Lake.

The repairing of the county roads between this place and Lakeview is progressing very favorably, and all the had places have been fixed in a workmanlike manner.

Jonas Norin came out a few days ago to be present at the shearing of his sheep.

Forest Supervisor Brown made a flying trip through here not long ago on business in connection with his office.

J. B. Martin Passes

James Buchanan Martin passed away at his home in Yreka about five o'clock Tuesday afternoon, May 30, after a lingering illness of several weeks duration. The best of medical attention and tender nursing where unable to stay the hand of death and the end had been expected since early Tuesday morning when his condition, which had been critical for two weeks, was pronounced hopeless. The funeral took place Wednesday in the Masonic hall at 2:30 o'clock under the auspices of St. John's Lodge No. 37, A. F. & A. M., assisted by Rev. J. C. Gillette and the choir of the M. E. Church.

Mr. Martin was born in Little Shasta on April 28, 1860, and his age was 51 years, 1 month and 2 days. He grew to manhood on his father's ranch and was married to Miss Isabella Hearn on his birthday in 1884. He followed farming until 1896 when he moved to Yreka where he was actively engaged in business up to the time he was taken with his last sickness. He took an active interest in politics and was deputy sheriff for Sheriff Marion Freshour during his term from 1898 to 1902. He also served his party as deputy sergeant at arms at the national convention at St. Louis in 1904 when Parker was nominated for the presidency. He was very successful in the insurance business and had been the district agent for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company for many years. In fire insurance he did a good business with the firm of Martin, DeWitt & Shearer.

The deceased was a man of many friends and as a Mason, an Elk and an Odd Fellow he was actively engaged in the benevolent work of these orders. He was generous almost to a fault and his fidelity and steadfastness to his friends was one of the many fine traits of his character. He was never of the demonstrative sort, but the many kindly acts performed in time of need and stress proclaimed him a true friend and a member of the brotherhood of man. He was devoted to his family and his passing is deeply mourned. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Isabella Martin, his mother, Mrs. Ann Martin of Little Shasta, and a sister and three brothers, Mrs. J. F. Long, of Yreka and Milton, Breece and Henry Martin of Little Shasta.

Speculators Warned

A warning against speculation in the 2,000,000 acres of valuable land in Oregon involved in the controversy between the United States and the Oregon & California Railroad Company was sounded last Thursday in the Senate Chamber by Senator Chamberlain.

He said that speculators were advertising special privileges and opportunities. The land, he declared, is not subject to such dealings and is not yet even subject to entry.

Shearing Plants

The sheep shearing corrals and dipping vats at Camas Prairie are now in first class order. During the shearing season the corrals will be in charge of the sheepmen. ROSA McDANIEL. My corrals on the West Side are now ready for the sheep shearing season, and I have a dipping plant in connection. Will have a good crew and superintend the work myself.

JOE AMBROSE.

Damage By Surface Fires

The statement is frequently made, "Light surface fires, such as those that run through the forest periodically, consuming the dry surface litter and undergrowth, without scorching the foliage of the trees, do no harm to the merchantable timber." This statement while rather plausible to those who are not familiar with the effect of forest fires, or who do not look at all sides of the question, does not appear, to those who study this problem carefully, to be borne out by the facts. A study was therefore made by the foresters of the Forest Service last autumn to determine just how much damage these light surface fires do to merchantable timber. A number of areas were examined, both in the Douglas fir region west of the Cascades and in the yellow pine region east of the Cascades, all of which had recently been burned over by surface fires; that is, fires which simply burn the ground cover of needles, twigs, dry grass and underbrush and do not get into the crowns of the trees; most of these areas had been periodically burned over previous to this last fire by similar light surface fires. The trees on strips running through typical parts of these burns, were classified according to the amount of damage they received in the fire either "burned to death"—trees were killed by the heat of the surface fire about their bases, "felled by fire"—living trees which were burned off at the butts by fire eating into basal fire scars, "scarred by fire"—trees which were fire scarred, either by the last or previous fires, so that the wood of the trunk was exposed, "uninjured"—trees which, at the time of the examination, showed no bad effects from the fire.

The following are some of the facts obtained by this intensive study of these burns:

On the area of the Medical Springs fire in Eastern Oregon before the fire there were on the average 17.8 merchantable yellow pines per acre; after the fire 7.7 of these showed fire scars, 1.2 trees were dead, and only 8.9 trees or about half, were apparently uninjured; yet to the casual observer the surface fire that ran over this area was not particularly harmful.

A small fire in Wallawa county, Oregon, burned over 23 acres of pine grass in an open yellow pine stand. The fire was merely a light grass fire, but it got into the pitchy butts of many of the trees and by actual count felled 6 big trees out of the 297 merchantable trees on the area. Many fires in the yellow pine region are of just this mild character; a single fire kills but a small proportion of the merchantable timber, but the sum of the damage done by a number of such periodical fires is enormous.

This means that on the average area which has been scorched by repeated fires anywhere from 22 to 40 per cent of trees are fire scarred, and that the average surface fire kills from 3 to 14 per cent of the merchantable trees chiefly by gnawing through their butts.

The lesson which this study teaches is that all surface fires, no matter how gentle and harmless they appear to be, if of sufficient area, always:

(1) Kill a certain amount of merchantable timber.

(2) Damage much of the merchantable timber that survives so that its commercial value is lessened, both in direct and indirect ways.

(3) Kills off much of the young growth, which should be the basis for the next crop.

Exert an unfavorable influence on the forest soil, thereby decreasing its productive capacity.

These being the facts, it follows clearly that fires should be absolutely prevented in all types of standing timber.
