Sunset Valley

Segirt by mountains, laved by the waters of Sunset lake and dotted by the homes of an industrious, intelligent and prosperous people wealthy from the income of ranch, range and forest, Sunset valley nestles at the western base of the Warner range, a little empire of peace and prosperity—a dream of delight—the pride of the great Northwest.

Pen of romancer or poet nor brush of artist can never picture a spot so fair, so perfectly magnificent, so bewilderingly beautiful, so entrancingly entrancing.

Rich beyond measure in energy and productiveness of soil, charming beyond description in the scenic effects of environments and promising conjecture in future possibilities, Sunset valley presents to the world its allurements of certain profits and salubrity of climate in a land that has no equal under the sun.

A valley of homes with all the endearments which the word implies. Combined with the numberless charms of Warner range and Sunset Lake the story is complete. A panorama of magnificent landscape, wild, weird imageries of topographical wonders, with glimpses of fairyland and enchanted realms, mountains piercing the clouds, bathed in eternal blue and kissed by the sun. Crags beaten by the storms of ages. Lightning riven cliffs and chasms riven by the eroding hand of the elements during thousands of centuries; mountain mirrored lakes and rivers reflecting the clouds; waterfalls wreathed with rainbows and foam-crested rapids; health-giving springs gushing from subterranean chemical laboratories, veritable fountains of immortal youth. Slopes clad in perennial verdure, sequestered glens where butterflies flit and sunbeams dance and where zephyrs, laden with fragrance of columbine, blue bell and daisy whisper their melodies of peace. Haunt of the denizens of forest, mountains and lake. Sunlight radiant as a vision of heaven; moonlight gorgeous with dreamy splendor.

A place where grandeur rivals beauty in an equal contest for supremacy and where ambition grapples with effort for possession and enjoyment of that which eye beholds. A land that within the near future will teem with busy thousands and now invites the multitudes to make it their home.

Desire for a habitation is instinctive in all animal life. From the lowest in the scale to man, "Home" is the one thing paramount.

Finny tribes of the deep have their regular abiding place, to which they return no matter where or how far they may roam beneath the waves.

Insects are strong and unerring in their instincts of inhabiteness. The ant knows where its tiny subterranean home is hidden and the bee flies straight for its hive laden with honey.

Birds migrate for thousands of miles with the changing of the seasons, and after months of habitation elsewhere, twitter again under the same eve or in the same tree which provided them homes the preceding year. Homing pigeons will fly hundreds of miles to coo again from their native coles after being carried in confinement to localities they have never seen before.

And man, no matter how nomadic, wants and loves a home. The wandering Gypsy and the Arab on the desert, both born to roam, regard their temporary abiding places, if occupied but for a single night, as home.

The African in the jungle has his hovel; the Indian has his wigwag; the Eskimoux has his ice hut; barbarous bands of the far off isles of the sea have their crude places in which to dwell. All the bloody wars that have marked with crimson the trail of mankind since the dawn of history have been waged for home and native land or for dominions in which to build homes in future.

Man's sweetest dream and fondest hope, his tenderest aspiration and sternest duty is home. His best intelligence and strongest struggles are expended for "home" and its endearments. "Home" is the "unwritten law" for which man will face prison, bars and the gallows. Home Eternal is the basis of all the religions that have swayed mankind from thy beginning.

"Mother, Home and Heaven" was the theme of one of the grandest sermons ever delivered from the pulpit.

Three words more dear to civilization than all others. Maternity and earthy abiding place, and a home beyond. The cradles of dear old mother "Home, Sweet Home." Destiny. The Great Hereafter.

All that breathe. All the tribes of earth that have come and gone. All who make the busy mart, and contribute to human advancement in science, trade or morals. All who have been, are, or will be. Ancestry, and posterity. Influence and result.

The busy brain and hardened brawn of man has earned and deserves a HOME. Man's dream and hope, his right and duty, is acquire and own, and enjoy a home.

The sweet breath of springtime, the warble of song birds, melodies from lute and harp swept by unseen hands, emotions that thrill and find responses in affinity.

The sage brush desert, blistered by the suns and swept by the storms of centuries; bleak, blank and forbidding. Uninviting, desolate, unproductive. A pain and a remorse. A rebuke to human aspiration.

But surely "God hath made every thing beautiful in its time and place."

The desert disappears, and the HOME is there. Meadows, and grain fields, orchards and gardens, the ranch and range, flocks and herds, and happy homes.

Out of the wilderness and the desert hath sprung splendid commonwealths. Water and air have been applied where needed, and no fairy tale of oriental splendor can eclipse the results.

The Nile has kept its record unswayed for thousands of years. The Great West will surpass Old Egypt so many times in so many few years that civilization will stand appalled.

There is no other name that gladdens like that of "Home." There is no other thought that thrills like "Home, Sweet Home."

And here in Sunset valley on the shores of Sunset Lake, in the shadows of Warner range, in "The Valley Where Dreams Come True," is home for you.

Find Petrified Wood

(High Grade News)

Charles Larkin brought a fine specimen of petrified wood to the News office on Tuesday. The specimen was found by Arthur Strong and Tom Dick while prospecting on the North Cottonwood.

The specimen is 16 inches in length and five inches in diameter and clearly shows the configurations of original wood. It is on exhibition at the News office and has attracted much attention.

A large number of New Pine Creek people joined the Lakeview excursion to Alturas last Sunday and report a most enjoyable time. They are loud in praise of Alturas people for courteous and kind treatment.
