CONSERVING THE SOIL MOISTURE

The crop of 1912 is simply phenomenal in the states of the Northwest. In the aggregate of it was doubtless never equalled. But the conclusion should not be reached that this result is owing to the high class character of the farming. With the same rainfall as in 1910 the results would be little if any improvement on the crop of that year. The bumper crop of the present is owing almost entirely to the unusual rain fall of the present season and to the timeliness with which it fell. The rainfall, unusual in the length of its continuance, has not only given the farmer the bumper crop referred to, but it will also give him at least a reasonable crop in 1913 if it is properly conserved, even though the season should be a dry one. How shall this moisture be conserved? First by discing the stubbles; second by plowing later in the season; third by stirring the soil in the early spring with disc or harrow or both, and fourth by harrowing the grain once or oftener after it has begun to grow.

In an exceedingly dry year discing the stubbles after harvest may not accomplish much by way of conserving moisture, but it will open up the dry soil so that rain may penetrate it more easily should it fall. But in a year like the present there is much moisture even in stubble land. It is greatly important that it shall be conserved. As soon, therefore, as the crop is removed the stubble land should be well disced. If the harrow can follow the operation will be more complete, but this is not absolutely essential. The discing will exert a very potent influence on the retention of moisture. It also allows moisture that may fall subsequently to the dicsing to penetrate more deeply than it otherwise would.

The land that is thus disced should be plowed later in the fall. Some farmers argue that stubble land should not be plowed or even disced in the fall, since the undisturbed stubbles may better hold the snow, but the preponderance of argument is easily in favor of autumn plowing. The land that has been disced is easily plowed and the same power will plow it deeper than if it had not been disced. It is not so essential to plowed disced land in the fall that is to be planted with corn. If the stubble land thus disced cannot all be plowed in the fall, the plowing of what is intended for corn can best be deferred. Much has been written about packing fall plowed land, but it is not very often that lands plowed in the autumn require to be packed.

Stirring the soil in the early spring with disc or harrow or both as occasion may call for, is but little practised. It is, nevertheless, of great moment and should be done as soon as the ground can be stirrred thus without injury to its mechanical condition. It stays at once the loss of moisture from the soil, at least for a time. Even though crops are to be planted late, as in the case of alfalfa, this stirring of the soils is very important. Of course it can only be done on summer-fallowed land or corn or potato land of the previous year, or on land that had been autumn plowed.

When grain has been sown on land thus prepared, the moisture may be further held by harrowing the grain. The best stage for the first harrowing is when the grain is just beginning to appear. The best implement for harrowing it, all things considered, is a light adjustable steel harrow. The teeth should be slanted backward with some few exceptions. But a weeder may be more suitable for very soft soils. If a second harrowing is given the grain should be, say 4 or 5 inches high at the time, so that none of it will be buried. Even flax and alfalfa may be harrowed, but not when they are coming up. It harrowed it should be when they are several inches high. Harrowing grain is not profitable when many soda or much trash is on the land.

If the farmers of the Northwest will but handle their lands thus they will be assured of at least fairly good crops next season, but if they give no attention to these methods of cultivation much moisture will be lost. If a very dry year the crop will then fail. It would be peculiarly unfortunate not to improve the opportunities to the utmost. Such seasons as the present are all to rare. Unless the farmers stack much of their grain they will not be able to handle their land as outlined, for the shocks will be in the way.

DECLARE WAR ON COLDS.

A crusade of education which aims "that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation" has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car."
"Don't sleep in hot rooms."
"Don't avoid the fresh air."
"Don't stuff yourself at meal time. Overeating reduces your resistance."

To which we would add—when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.
