

INDIAN TROPHY SHOW IS BEST

HISTORICAL COLLECTION, MADE BY WOMAN AMONG EIGHTEEN TRIBES, AT COLISEUM, CHICAGO

The land show at the Coliseum, Chicago had the greatest individual collection of beaded-buckskin wearing apparel in the world. This included historical war dress worn by Old Si-Yeh, Little Plume, distinguished warriors of the Blackfoot Tribe in Glacier National Park.

The exhibit, which formed a picturesque part of the Glacier National park booth, is the property of Mrs. Margaret Carberry of Blackfoot, Mont.

Mrs. Carberry devoted twelve years of her life in the United States Indian service as a school teacher. She has been twenty-two years gathering the 2,344 articles of Indian wearing apparel, every piece of which has been worn by an Indian.

Trading Woman, as she is known among the Indians, made her collection among eighteen tribes in New Mexico, Arizona, Nebraska, Wyoming and Montana. She has the gala and ordinary attire which were worn by the tribes of the Sioux, Piegans, Chipewas, Modoc, Commanche, Shoshone, Arapaho, Moki and Cheyenne nations.

One of the most prized things in her collection is the complete "full dress suit" of the late Little Plume, a noted warrior, which was worn for the last time by Little Plume in the Roosevelt inaugural parade in Washington. Little Plume was proudest in this attire on that occasion when President Roosevelt saluted him as the Indian chief passed the reviewing stand before the Great White Chief of the nation.

This is the first time Mrs. Carberry's exhibit ever was displayed. The Smithsonian institution has endeavored to get possession of the collection, but Trading Woman would not sell a single moccasins. She does not even attempt to fix a financial value on it. In fact, she is so solicitous about the safety of the collection that she insured it for $15,000 against fire and Louis W. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern railway, who induced her to bring it to Chicago, agreed to hire two night watchmen to guard it before she would even consent to ship the stuff to the Chicago show.

The seven Blackfoot Indians who were guests at the land show took turns staying in the booth to keep an eye upon the passing throngs during show hours.

There is one string of 150 elk teeth in the collection.
