POSSIBILITIES OF CONVICT LABOR

How Prisoners Are Making Highways in Colorado.

IS CHEAP AND PERMANENT.

Made Possible by the Low Cost of the Work—Benefit to Taxpayers and Workers—Honor System Used Exclusively and is Very Successful.

The question of good roads is one of the most vital with which the farming community of any state has to deal. Many communities in the different states long ago realized the vast importance of this question and have taken advantage of the opportunity at hand to build permanent roadways, says T. J. Tynan, warden of the Colorado state penitentiary. No one will dispute the fact that good roads are our greatest need and our greatest asset.

A serious question presenting itself to the people is the fact that certain interests of the nation are seeking to destroy the good roads movement. I, for one, do not believe that the people will passively consent to be held in the clutches of the foes of the public welfare any longer. Convict labor upon public highways possesses possibilities that are almost limitless, and no better illustration of it can be found than here in Colorado, where we have demonstrated that good roads can be constructed more economically and more expeditiously by convict labor, under the guiding hand of the state, than under any other conditions.

The criminal, as we all know, is a costly unit to society. It is only during the period of his imprisonment that society has an opportunity to control his purposes to such useful ends as will materially lessen the cost of his imprisonment and often make it a source of remuneration rather than an expense to the state. Under most of our prison systems the convicts come out more cruel and cunning than when they went in.

Our prisons do not reform the prisoner, and our prison factory labor does not teach the prisoner a trade, notwithstanding the claims made to this effect. For the most part the prisoners are employed on piecework, and there is no chance for an individual to master all the details of any trade. Fifty-five per cent of the prison boards where prison factory labor is practiced are trying to abolish it. It is a curse to every man it touches. Under the contract system the labor contractor usually becomes the real head of the institution and the warden merely a figurehead.

When I took charge of the prison at Canon City we had 500 idle men in the institution. These have since been put to work at road building and in operating a 1,000 acre farm adjoining the prison. Our convict labor has paid as an economic proposition. It has proved efficient and has cost little. Many states have found convict labor outside the prison walls unprofitable because they have paid too much attention to guarding the convicts. Armed guards have frequently cost more than the labor was worth. I have found in my experience that prisoners are just folks, that there is an element of good in most of them and that sane, humane treatment will take the place of armed guards and do the work more efficiently. We are at present working 50 per cent of our prisoners outside the prison purely on the honor system. I am sure that 75 per cent of the men in the average prison can be successfully handled in this manner, with a small percentage of escapes. Work on the roads is sought for by our prisoners. We make it an object for them to do good work and not attempt to escape. In addition to the regular time off for good behavior, which amounts in some cases to ten days a month, we give an added reduction of one month for the first year's work on the roads, two months for the second year, and so on up to six months the sixth year. In case of indeterminate sentences we deduct this from the minimum sentence imposed. In case a prisoner on honor breaks his trust or attempts to escape he is returned to the prison and loses all credit.
