HOW ONE TOWN SOLVED ITS AMUSEMENT PROBLEM

Pittsfield, Mass., Now Has Good Plays of Educational Value.

Two years ago the citizens of Pittsfield, Mass., decided that it would be well to try to make their town theater an institution of some value to the community instead of having it conducted after the manner of theaters in most of the smaller cities and towns of the United States. Their experience may be of value to other places suffering from similar evils.

The theater was in a rundown condition and under management which had let it go from bad to worse. The Pittsfield men got together and chip in enough to buy it out and put it in good condition in every way. They did not confine their efforts to the front of the house, but even went so far as to put in decent dressing rooms with modern conveniences. They made tempting terms and tried to secure attractions which would give Pittsfield something besides a constant succession of cheap musical shows and by night entertainments. In this they were fairly successful, but found that they were like other places, the victims of the erratic booking system which controls theaters in America. In addition they found that conducting the enterprise was taking more of their time and energy than they cared to devote to it. Therefore they turned the house over to William Parke, who had had a considerable experience at the Castle Square in Boston, and aided him in the establishment of a stock company.

Mr. Parke was so encouraged by his early experiences with the Pittsfield public that he took the theater over at a rental which is satisfactory to its owners, and Pittsfield now has an attractive, well conducted theater, at which are regularly presented by a well trained company the standard plays and the more recent successes as fast as they are released for stock company use.

With the knowledge that their theater could be relied upon a new theater going public has developed not only in Pittsfield itself, but in the territory which is accessible by trolley. Financially it has not been a great success so far, but has been self supporting to an extent that makes every one concerned willing to go on with the enterprise. The experiment is of value to other communities that find themselves in the same position as Pittsfield.

In Northampton, Mass., they have tried out the experiment of a municipal theater with considerable success, but this idea is not so likely to commend itself to American communities. There is a reasonable existing prejudice among most Americans against using public moneys for purposes of amusement, even in the form of an educational theater. There can, of course, be no such objection to such an enterprise as that in Pittsfield, and the theater is copied the better for dramatic art in America. The stock company is about the only practical school for the stage that we have in this country and today is supplying the best new material that comes to the metropolitan theaters.

WOMEN CLEAN UP TOWN: BOY SCOUTS ASSIST THEM

Ladies Work With Hoes and Rakes to Beautify Cornwall, N. Y.

When the board of health of Cornwall, a village near the city of Newburgh, N. Y., after repeated appeals, failed to clean up the Moodna creek, a stream which had long been made the dumping ground of all kinds of refuse and constituted a constant menace to health, the women of the town took the matter into their own hands. Wealthy women organized an improvement society, which was nicknamed "the tin can committee," and set about the cleaning up of the creek and adjacent properties.

Flanked by a squad of boy scouts, many of the most prominent women of the town marched to the Moodna with hoes and rakes and began a cleanup of the banks of the creek. On the first day their labors, which had progressed finely, were interrupted by rain, but the following week their work was finished. Plans are now being perfected to keep the creek and its environs in a condition where it will be neither an eyesore nor a menace to the health of the community.

At the conclusion of their labors the women said that the Moodna had been made the dumping ground for all sorts of garbage and what they did was "by way of protest against this custom, which is calculated to make the beautiful country unhealthy and to give an unfavorable impression of the artistic nature of its inhabitants to the travelers within our boundaries."

The Ideal City of Today.

It controls its physical foundations; it is not controlled by them. It subordinates property to humanity; it permits the freest possible play of individual initiative so long as the individual does not interfere with the common weal. At the same time it reserves to itself the right to determine where the freedom of the individual must end and the activity of the city begin, and when the city does make an investment it keeps for itself as large a portion of the speculative profit as it can. It pays for its parks and its boulevards, its docks and its wharves from out the resale of surplus land which it acquires in excess of its needs. —Los Angeles Times

HILL PARTY SEES CENTRAL OREGON

Possible Investigation of Extension of Oregon Trunk South

A railroad party headed by L. W. Hill, son of James J. Hill, the Empire Builder, and chairman of the board of directors of the Great Northern last week completed an automobile tour of Central Oregon coming south below Bend. According to information given out the trip was made for the purpose of outlining plans for the development and colonization of the interior of the state, as well as investigating the possible extension of the Hill line south from Bend.

After returning to Portland Mr. Hill is quoted as follows: "After our two days' automobile spin through the rapidly developing portions of Central Oregon I have greater optimism over the future of the vast empire than I ever had before," said L. W. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern board as he arrived in from Bend early this morning. "The progress that has been made ever since the last time I was over there is simply amazing and I am going right back there again the first of the week and cover territory I had no opportunity of seeing on the present hurried tour."

While the party was in Bend the following news dispatch was sent from that place:

"Louis W. Hill and party, including President Young and Chief Engineer Luper, of the Oregon Trunk railway, spent Wednesday night here and yesterday made an auto trip over the survey of the Oregon Trunk south of here. They went south until they struck the route of the Natron cut-off of the Southern Pacific, returning here last night."

"Asked regarding extension of the Oregon Trunk south this summer, Mr. Hill said: 'On that I can't say anything, but you will know that the extension has been started when you see the graders at work.'"

"Mr. Hill has with him maps of the survey south of here and will go over them with Chief Engineer Luper, who has become familiar with the territory through which the survey passes since succeeding Chief Engineer Ralph Budd. "The party made a trip from Redmond to Sisters recently, reaching here in the evening and taking a look at the local sawmill."

A Tickled Palate

With prices mounting skyward and cost of living driving opportunity for living downward, real eaters should weigh their responsibility. Someone good at figures says Americans eat 600,000,000 pounds of veal each year, whereas the abandonment of veal as food would by growth of the animal increase this visible meat supply to 5,000,000,000 pounds in one year. Among 250,000 people, if no one else used it, would mean 17,600 pounds of meat for every man; woman and child in that many people. Figuring a little further, 17,600 pounds of meat would last each individual 100 years, eating half a pound a day, with fish 13 days a year for a change. But why the argument? In these days of the high cost of living problem its a tickled palate rather than a satisfied stomach.

THE BLACK LEGHORN. A Pittsburgher writes: "What variety of hen would you keep in my climate for maximum eggs?" Well, if we lived in smoky, sooty, black Pittsburgh we should keep Black Leghorns, sure, but really they make good anywhere. The Black Leghorn is an established Italian variety, and a visit to Genoa today will show them the same there as in 1872, when they were imported to this country, and they were then so perfect that just three years after they were admitted to the standard of excellence.

With the other seven varieties of Leghorns it is not so difficult to get the yellow shank, but to get a yellow shank and a pure black plumage—"ab, there's the rub!"

Black Leghorn chicks generally hatch dark legs, and these very often turn pure yellow in the males, but remain black or yellowish black in the females, and it is often the case that the male with pure yellow shank has white in the tail, while the hen with pure black plumage has a black or yellowish black leg.

It seems against nature for black plumage and yellow shanks to be bred in the same bird, and this the standard recognizes when it calls for yellow or yellowish black shanks in show specimens.

The Black is the largest of the Leghorn tribe and is claimed to be the wildest and the greatest flier, having been known to rise straight off the ground in a graceful flight of 300 feet. It is not inferior to any of the Mediterranean in laying, being especially good in winter and laying the largest Leghorn egg. We recommend the Black Leghorn to those who desire to keep the White, but cannot because their white plumage becomes so soiled in the small runs and soot of the city.

DON'TS.

Don't neglect the comfort of the watch dog. As there is an inhumanity to man, so there is much brutality to brutes. Let us see that we exercise mercy toward the least of God's creatures or we shall not obtain mercy for ourselves.

Don't use a megaphone to tell your troubles. Be still, sad heart, and cease repining. You'll never gain a rap by whining.

Don't ask the editor questions on poultry. Ask him for a receipt for cash in advance and hooray for the chance. Send your query to C. M. B. with a stamp, but no fee.

Don't locate your poultry plant without studying surrounding conditions first. Transportation facilities and market are chief considerations.

Don't buy beef scrap without first getting samples and refuse shipment if sample and goods are not the same quality.
