NEW CURRENCY LAW CONSIDERED BOON TO COUNTRY

Banker Mills of Portland Explains Measure in an Address to Business Men

"I do not believe we shall ever again see such panics as we had in 1873, 1893 and 1907," said A. L. Mills, president of the First National Bank addressing the Progressive Business Men's Club in Portland recently on the newly enacted currency law. Mr. Mills described in plain language the purpose of the new currency measure and how it is expected to work and detailed some of the steps already taken to place it in operation.

The currency bill is intended, he explained, to provide three principal remedies for existing financial ills: First a mobilization of the bank resources of the country; second, an emergency currency in time of financial stress, and third, a system of rediscounting that will at all times provide greater elasticity to the nation's currency.

He then related how the federal reserve board, sitting in Washington is to administer the affairs of the new system and of how the 12 reserve districts, recently formed by the board, are to govern the affairs of the banks in their respective districts.

In further explanation he applied the concrete example of the way the 12th reserve district in which Portland is located now is being organized. For the purpose of electing this organization J. W. Newkirk, cashier, and Henry L. Corbett, vice president of the First National Bank recently attended a meeting in San Francisco with officials from four other banks in this district. There they formally formed the new bank and applied to the federal authorities at Washington for a charter, permitting it to begin business. As soon as this charter is issued all the member banks in the district will be notified and instructed to pay their stock subscription into the new bank.

The manner of electing the directors of the regional banks was further described. Three sets of three directors each are provided for. The first set consisted of "Class A" directors who must be active bankers; Class B directors must be business men within the district and Class C directors are appointed by the federal reserve board. They must live within the district, but cannot be officers or directors of any bank, although they are permitted to own bank stock.

At a recent preliminary meeting in San Francisco, Mr. Mills explained it was agreed that none of the Class A or Class B directors should live more than six hours from San Francisco, so to facilitate the work of organizing and operating the new bank.

He briefly discussed the provisions made for the establishment of branch banks in Portland, Or., Seattle, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles and predicted that these branches probably will be ready for business within a few months after the main bank at San Francisco is opened. The San Francisco bank probably will be opened, he said in time to handle this year's crops.

While the new system is expected to be an important factor in improving business conditions, the business man as a matter of fact, will have no direct relations with the reserve banks," Mr. Mills went on.

"He will continue to transact his business with the individual banks now in operation, as the reserve banks cannot take deposits from others than stockholders, nor can the businessman borrow money from the reserve bank directly. That bank is simply a bank of banks, a central reservoir for the individual banks of the district, where they will deposit their funds and where they will borrow money for their needs.

"Although the individual business man will have no direct dealings with the reserve bank, he will be affected by the requirements of the new system, which provide that all notes will be made with a fixed maturity and that interest be taken out in advance. This is to conform with the rules that will make the rediscounting possible."

Mr. Mills predicted that the system will invite the practice among business men of taking short-time notes in settlement of accounts, as such paper will be subject to rediscount. It is probable, too, he said, that the exchanges are now absorbed frequently by the city banks will be greatly.

BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT CONTINUES OVER COUNTRY

Dun & Co. Reports Slow But Certain Advance—Lumber Industry Is In Fine Shape

Business improvement continues throughout the country—slow, but sure. Failures are decreasing, both as regards the volume and amount. One of the healthiest businesses shown is in lumber, despite talk of stagnation.

Once again the failure record for the United States discloses progressive improvement, commercial defaults during May as reported to R. G. Dun & Co., making the best exhibit of the year, from a numerical standpoint, and also showing some contraction as compared with the corresponding period of 1913. That there were 1,221 business reverses in April, 1,416 in March, 1,505 in February and 1,875 concerns were forced to suspend.

All of the decrease in 1913 was confined to the trading class, in which the losses numbered 833 in comparison with 888; manufacturing class insolvencies, on the other hand were slightly larger—222 against 318—and among agents, brokers and firms of similar character there were no less than 66 failures, or 21 more than a year ago.

Chief significance attaches to the number of suspensions rather than to the aggregate liabilities, and it is gratifying that in the former connection the mercantile death rate is diminishing especially more since new enterprises are continually being launched.

Separation of the business mortality record, according to occupation, shows that 322 manufacturing suspensions involved the sum of $10,340,189, as compared with $7,839,778 for the 313 defaults a year ago. Six of the fifteen different branches of business into which the statement is divided is disclosed a smaller number of failures than in May, 1913, while in one, namely woollens, etc., there was no change. The best exhibit was made by the group embracing lumber, carpenters and copers.

Congressman A. W. Lafferty, since being defeated in the primaries for re-nomination as congressman from the third district, comprising Multnomah County, has announced himself as a candidate on the Independent ticket, claiming that the other fellow didn't play fair in politics.
