

Is Your Marriage a Study Your Dreams, Says Happy One?

the book is direct, open, and illuminating. One is both delighted and fascinated at the clean, intimate approach to problems which shy young couples are often too timid to discuss. In this regard, this book ought to interest middle-aged and elderly couples, for they are not infrequently leading unhappy married lives, due to a misplaced adherence to outworn traditions of false pride and modesty. Too often, they forget that a happy marriage is an intelligent adjustment of individual differences and shortcomings and not a subjection of one personality to another.

This book aims to impress the fact that a touch of common sense in the marriage relation will go much farther than mutual abuse and impatience with perfectly natural human frailties. It points a clear-cut path to marital happiness. The authors have presented solutions to marital difficulties which are difficult to uproot, if at all.

One wonders why a chapter was not included on "The Other Man" to complement the chapter on "The Other Woman." In view of the fact that one of the authors is a woman, this may be chivalrously overlooked.

We recommend this sound book as a constructive help to all who are interested in the marriage relation.

DEAR FRIEND:
I dreamed that I was going down a steep hill, catching to keep from falling, and when I reached the bottom I began to dig for worms. I dug in old rotten logs and found white worms, and then I dug in the ground and found earth worms to fish with, but didn't fish any.

Then I climbed the hill to the top without any trouble. At one side of the hill was a bridge and at the bottom of the hill was a creek, but all of the water had dried out of it. Then I came to a narrow stream of water and it was clear, and I stood and gazed in the stream. And up above me was someone kicking dirt in the stream and I could see the dirt pass under the clear water.

Please tell me the meaning of my dream.—Yours truly, (Miss) Mary A. Joyner, Snow Hill, N. C.

Divorce Better Than Disgust, Says Mrs. Jerome

Have you a puzzling love affair on which you need friendly advice? Write to Julia Jerome, care of this newspaper. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

What do you hear this week from New Orleans, "My Dear Mrs. Jerome? I have been married fifteen years. Fourteen of those fifteen years I have spent quarreling with my husband. I should have left him years ago, but a false optimism kept me clinging on, hoping that children or habit or something would solve our troubles. Now I am nearly forty and have five children to further complicate matters. I have also found love elsewhere, but because three of my children are mere babies I feel that I would be doing both them and their father an injustice to separate at this time. Yet my home life is driving me crazy. Could you advise me?"—Middle Aged.

DUTY TO SELF
I believe that your first duty is to yourself. You have waited enough of your life, M., on that husband. I don't know whose fault it is that you don't get along—probably the blame is equally divided—but if in fifteen years you have not been able to straighten out either him or yourself, it is time you quit. If people had thought as liberally fifteen years ago as they do now about divorce, you probably would not have waited for accidents to rescue you, but would have rescued yourself.

BE KIND TO OTHERS
I believe your first duty is to yourself, because unless you are happy you will not be able to make others happy. It is impossible for a woman to perform her duties efficiently in the home if her heart is not in it. Haven't you noticed that when people are happy themselves they are kinder to others? It is the man or woman who is soured on the world—who is unhappy, in other words—who is the most exacting and intolerant.

QUARRELS BAD EXAMPLE
Besides, your constant quarreling will influence your children's dispositions. Children, unconsciously or otherwise, imitate their parents. You will also by your example instill in them a suspicion and dislike of marriage in general. In fact, I think the widespread skepticism toward marriage manifested by modern youth today is mainly a result of having watched the disputes and petty bickering of parents married in the old-fashioned way. "for bad or worse." It is better that children be separated from one of their parents than that they should grow up feeling disgust for both of them.
