

HARVARD HONORS HIM

THIS photograph shows Robert Russa Moton, upon whom the degree of master of arts was conferred by Harvard, Thursday, June 20. The following words by President A. Lawrence Lowell preceded the conferring of this degree, "Robert Russa Moton, worthy successor of a great educator of his race—a man whose courage and sagacity have triumphed over perils to his school." Harvard conferred an honorary degree on the late Booker T. Washington also.

No, This Is Not Abraham Lincoln

BUT this is the most realistic of all Lincoln's impersonators. His name is Charles R. Miles and he was chosen to play the part of the great emancipator in a series of Tableaux staged in Long Beach, California at the famous Wayside Art Colony. Mr. Miles attracts attention wherever he goes. It is not uncommon for him to be followed by crowds who marvel at his striking likeness to Lincoln. His son, Richard, impersonates Tad Lincoln. The picture here shows Mr. Miles and Mr. Nichols in one of their most striking poses.

Christopher Delancey

Was Known As

"The Catch of the Season"

Grace's stepmother wanted her to become his wife. But Grace loved Ransome Dodge, just an honest-to-goodness plain chap. Then came the crisis in. . . .

"My Great Temptation"

A True Story

Read the advice of a girl who grappled with an age-old problem.

COMING

in the ILLUSTRATED FEATURE SECTION

THE LIFE OF BERT WILLIAMS No. 5. . . .

Text by BEN DAVIS, JR.

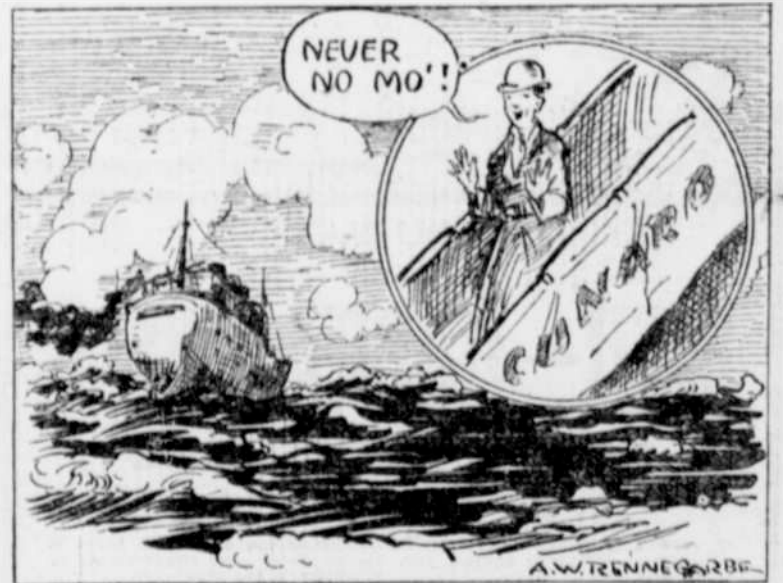

Drawn by A. W. RENNEGARBE

In 1895 Williams and Walker arrived in Chicago after several seasons together in the Varieties. There they met Jesse Shipp, a colored writer, who produced their comedy successes.

The first show in which they played together was "The Gold Bag," in 1898. It closed a flat failure. But this did not discourage them.

The famous team's next venture was a trip abroad in a specialty which also failed to meet expectations. Williams raised his hand upon returning to America and said, "Nev'r no mo'" in his famous stage dialect. Success seemed difficult to attain at first.