

BEAUTY for YOU

She Nearly Lost Her Husband—Because she Forgot to Keep Good-Looking.

One of the most interesting letters that has come to my desk for quite a long time came in this morning. One of my readers tells me an interesting little story that I want to pass on to you.

At one time she was one of the prettiest girls in her neighborhood. She had beaux a-plenty. She had a lot of friends and finally she got married.

Right then she forgot all about the things that had been most important before. She had a home of her own, she got busy taking care of it and part of the time she worked away from home. Her days were busy, there was no question about that. Weeks went by, then months and after a while years. Then she suddenly found that her husband was forgetting her entirely. At first she was broken hearted. She cried and refused to go out anywhere. Everything was a wreck. The life she had been living so contentedly was something that was gone.

This is what she tells me in her letter but there is something more. Suddenly she woke up to the fact that possibly the blame was not all her husband's. She took herself in hand and before her mirror studied herself! Just as though she were an entire stranger. She dug up an old photograph and then she studied herself again and right there decided that she was not out of the game after all. She had been attractive once—and her study of the mirror showed her that she had lost that attractiveness. She wasn't the girl her husband had married and from that minute on she set out to be that girl again.

I can't tell you here the things that she tells me in this letter but there is a reason why I have passed this little story to you. A good many letters come to my desk from women who tell the same story. They want to know why their husbands are forgetting them—and the only answer I can give them is that they are losing the attractiveness that they once had. They are forgetting to keep physically fit; they are forgetting that a pretty face and a graceful body do mean something in this world's happiness.

If you are losing your husband's affections, if you feel he is interested in some other woman, remember that you have a part to play in the game and that the sooner you get to playing it, the sooner you will be sure of happiness again.

JOE PLAYS HIDE AND SEEK WITH BOOTLEGGERS

the superintendent's office and strolled toward the lone house. He was greeted cordially and introduced as a "good fellow" by the man who had invited him. Into the kitchen he was taken and offered a big glass. A sip of it verified its potency. Slipping his hands into his pockets, he pulled out a search warrant from one pocket and a gun from the other. All that remained was the use of the telephone and the arrival of the wagon.

Found Busy Still

"In one room there was a great still going full blast, and a row of barrels containing alcohol," Jackson explained. "There were jars of chemical coloring and essences of various liquors used to give flavor and taste. There was a bottle of oil to give the moonshine 'head,' and enough labels and corks to stock a warehouse."

Many and varied have been the hiding places that have come under the suspicious eye of Joe Jackson. No one, for example, would wonder at a man filling his gasoline tank in his machine. Too ordinary, perhaps!

"We caught a fellow that thought he had played it safe by having a two-compartment tank," Jackson laughed. "One side was for gas and the other for bootlegging. When he poured the latter in from a can, no one thought it anything but gas. However, the fellow used to make frequent trips to another city, and that aroused the curiosity of neighbors. Then some of the neighbors smelled his 'gas' and it didn't smell like the proper kind. Well, we got a tip, and soon we had the man."

Among other unique hiding places Jackson tells of a colored janitor who should have the prize.

"We located a long tube that had been placed in a fire house of a certain office building," Joe said. "By unscrewing the nozzle of the hose it was an easy matter to slip the container in the hose. Just what would have happened if the water pressure had been turned on is a matter that caused me to wonder and the owner too. Guess there would have been a spray of real 'fire water.'"

"There was a decided dearth of dandelions in one section of the city, that one of the men noticed and mentioned at the office," Jackson continued. "I thought nothing of it until I noticed a group of children with large baskets who seemed very busy in hunting the little plant. When I trailed them I found their mother, a laundress. Measuring her washtub, it was evident that there was more room than appeared to the eye, so beneath the soiled clothes was discovered a false bottom and within there was found a fairly good quantity of dandelion wine. Searching still further other apparatus was located."

But even the ace of prohibition has his troubles. There are plenty of unlucky trips and ones that do not
