

WHEN THE PRETTY WOMAN AT THE WELL LOST HER HEART

What she had done was for love. She had made a mistake, but love was the cause of it. Moreover, she did not regret the mistake. Love had caused more than one woman to bring disgrace to herself and to her people. She died, was reborn, then died again. She was sure that not an atom of life remained in her body and that only her soul remained to face the issue. It seemed, in short, that she was living through a terrible nightmare.

room. The windows of this antiquated fire trap were insecure. By shoving against them with all his weight the prisoner was able to dislocate one of the bars. He followed up his advantage by dislocating another. Soon he had made a hole large enough to crawl through. Once free in the moonlight he paused in indecision.

It wasn't far to Jahilia's home. Creeping through the night he made his way there. Sealing the porch pillar at the west end of the roof, he maneuvered himself to her bedroom window. Already he knew the house like a book. Here he paused and thumped against the glass. Jahilia heard him. She rushed to the window and unlatched it.

For two days he remained in that room with her, speaking words of love, protesting his innocence, begging her to flee with him, to get the money and to go with him to find peace. They had to talk in whispers, and when Jahilia went out of the room to get the money, she locked him in a clothes closet. She returned with five hundred dollars.

Pole had failed to find any trace of the escaped prisoner until his daughter suspected Jahilia of hiding pertinent information, and put her parent wise. The girl was hiding out, but a light burned in her window from dark to dawn. The constable's jealous daughter had been watching.

Pole, spying from behind a tree in the front yard, saw the lighted window and saw two distinct figures. He timed his time, and was rewarded. The man and the girl stole out upon the roof of the porch and down the pillar at the west end. They were armed for travel. With a drawn revolver he paused, not knowing whether to shoot or to call out a halt. But he followed them into the back yard where there was an old iron cattle pump and a board fence. Then when they were about to climb over the fence, Pole watched them to stop.

But they did not heed him. "Go to the devil," was Pole's mumbled threat.

He had planned to follow Jahilia, but she had found Pole, having watched her in the night.

It was then that Pole realized that the night watching had been a trap.

Dr. Bunker's Handwriting Analysis

By DR. M. N. BUNKER

Harry Stephen Keeler, who edits a magazine or two on the side, writes four books a year. That means a new book every ninety days. These books are published in England, and also in the United States, and are read by thousands upon thousands of men and women who like mystery stories.

Yet Mr. Keeler does not write a copy-book hand. His letters are very individual, but they tell things about the man that no copy-book style of writing could tell. What is more, he could not write a copy-book style. It is not his nature. He has such a mighty force of emotionalism expressed in color that it would be impossible for him to make the light lines of the copy-book.

Many of Mr. Keeler's books have had to do with the Chinese and with strange mysteries. There could not be any other field for him because these heavy pen-strokes all mean the color of mystery, or strange adventures.

If he lacked literary talent, then we would find Mr. Keeler as a florist, or as an interior decorator, or in some other work where he could deal with color. But he has literary ability. He is so filled with it that he must write. Therefore he writes books that have color to them.

He is a diplomat. He thinks liberally. He has positive ideas. He has much determination. He has a naincomprehensible nature. Everything else, regardless of its seriousness, that opposes love is as naught. The love of Jahilia Durston was the kind which makes slaves of men and women and never allows them to escape since it secures its grip.

SILVER AND ITS CARE

The beauty of silver is only maintained at the price of constant and diligent care. Since the product of the silversmith's art are among the most beautiful objects of the home, it is a shameless oversight that they are not as well kept. The art of keeping silver in a state of perfect beauty is a science that is not only a part of the household's duty, but also a part of the household's pleasure.

DON'T FLIE" WITH A COLD

A "little cold" is a dangerous thing. You may neglect one, two or a dozen of them, but sooner or later find that one has gotten the better of you.

One of the most important things you can do, both to prevent and to correct colds, is to take action against acidosis—which merely means that the body is less alkaline than it should be.

At the first sign of a cold, go home as quickly as possible. Take a hot bath and get into a warm bed at once. Then drink a full glass of hot lemonade. The "sweat-out" that follows will eliminate poisons. In the morning, pour the juice of one lemon into a half-glass of water. Stir in a half-teaspoon of baking soda. Drink it while it effervesces. Repeat three times a day until all cold symptoms disappear. Also, see your doctor before colds become serious.

ture that looks at tomorrow and says, "That much I will get done." And, no matter how difficult it may be, Mr. Keeler can will to do it.

There is another trait in his nature that might affect everything he would do. If he had not become a writer, he could have become an artist. This again would have been the result of his color sense.

Harry Stephen Keeler

Let us suppose, though, that Harry Stephen Keeler had not found his right work. As a merchant, selling groceries, he would have been a failure. He would never have succeeded in running a restaurant. If he had not found his right work, he would easily have been a failure. As it is, he is one of the most popular writers we have.

If you have found your right work you will be happy, and successful in it. You will be doing things. But if you have not, you are losing ground.

You cannot afford to do this. You need to go ahead. You need to gain ground instead of losing it. You need to go some place—and know where it is that you are going.

There is no better way to find this goal for yourself, than to study your natural talents, and know what you are fitted for doing the best.

OH, YEAH!

The best heard this year tells about the green Englishman who strode up to a bar in the Canadian cow country and asked for a beer.

When it was taken care of according to the Queen's taste, a rough looking cowboy invited the stranger to have a drink on him. The Englishman spread himself with the remark that he made it a practice never to drink with strangers.

It had been some time since the cowboy had had a drink, and he was a little tipsy. He said to the Englishman, "You are a little bit of a fellow, aren't you?"

The Englishman replied, "Yes, I am a little bit of a fellow, but I am not a bit of a fellow."

Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.
