SATAN'S HENCHMAN

tonished man to reveal and operate the secret elevator. Theo and the officers were lowered into the passage, where they joined their companions. Through all the rooms the search continued, gaining prisoners as it went.

In the room where Theo had been kept a prisoner, the tied guard was found. Up those short narrow steps they plunged, which led through another passage to another flight of steps. There they found a suite of rooms, gorgeously furnished, with Foo Chang in hiding with the strange Chinese girl and the man who had carried the knife to attack Marcia. They joined the crowd.

By this time officers and police had entered every entrance and every secret egress had been well guarded. Couples had been captured on the roof and every conceivable hiding place was searched and delivered of its occupants. The narcotic squad too—possession of a huge quantity of drugs and contraband, while a fortune in liquor was secured as evidence. And in support of what had long been rumored, the most expensive gambling paraphernalia in the city was confiscated.

One Hundred Gathered In

Foo Chang, with his Paradise Cabaret and its auxiliary conveniences, had long been a source of complaint, but his power and affluence had until now withstood all attempts to repudiate. In this early morning raid, its destruction had proved complete. With over a hundred inmates incarcerated, together with the evidence gathered, the raid was accredited with being the most successful in years.

But there were two among those missing whom Theo needed in the chain of evidence which bore particularly upon his own future. From the dragnet, Terry and Jenny Gilman had, in some manner, been able to escape, but were brought in the following day, having been detected at Bolton's summer home. And with their arrest, not a one of Bolton's confederates was at large.

Jenny Tells All

The third degree was applied to Bolton's band of criminals, and Jenny Gilman was the first to talk. Her confession, complete in every detail, paved the way to Bolton's conviction. Jenny boasted of the fact that she had been the mistress of J. Francis Bolton, better known in most circles as Frank Bolton, for years, and that most of his schemes had been aided and abetted by herself. That she had administered the poison that killed William Anson and enabled Bolton to get control of the estate, and that he had squandered thousands of dollars that rightfully belonged to Marcia, Anson's daughter.

She had been loyal to Bolton until his fling in high society circles; his desire to wreck the Negrolian Insurance Company and marry Clarice Oliver. It was Edward Terry, Bolton's main confederate, who had introduced her to the drug habit and took advantage of her. Terry had induced her to help him in his schemes to marry Marcia and steal her estate, then flee with her to South America. It was Terry who had put her in a house when she was ejected by Bolton, and Terry had abducted Marcia upon her return to the city the previous day, intending rape.

Terry, confronted with Jenny's confession, admitted its truth, adding that Bolton was responsible for the wrecked treasury of the Ancient Order of Abyssinia and had become associated with Foo Chang. That Marcia Anson's and his life had been attempted by a Chinese man and woman, harbored by Foo Chang. That he had driven, under Bolton's instructions, Oliver's car on the night of the holdup and kidnapping of Theo Ashton, then the cashier of the Negrolian Company.

More Confessions

Foo Chang admitted complicity

with Bolton in that he had received ten thousand dollars in counterfeit money from Bolton for harboring one Chinese woman, Tao Ming, and her confederate, Sing Chu, just smuggled in from Canada, and wanted for murdering his ward for her fortune; also Terry, who planned to double cross him. That Bolton had sent Terry to meet Marcia at the train and he carried her to Foo Chang's.

The three bandits captured in the attempted Oliver holdup confessed their guilt in that event, as well as the first attempt on the Negrolian Life Insurance Company, which Theo had foiled, and implicated Bolton as the director of both plots.

Jim Kennedy, the white officer from the South, admitted complicity with Bolton, his old friend, in that he had been hired by Bolton to watch Marcia's moves while she was in the South straightening up her father's estate, and to kidnap and do away with her if possible. He showed letters and telegrams to verify his statements.

Tao Ming and Sing Chu confessed their part in the conspiracy. That they had been given protection by Foo Chang and a promise of transportation to South America for the murder of Terry and Marcia.

Day by day evidence and proof piled up against Bolton. The authorities of many cities throughout the country requested his extradition on many and various charges.

It was several days after the raid that Theo received an urgent call from President Oliver, beseeching him to call at his residence immediately. Theo reluctantly complied, and was greeted by Oliver, himself. Lines of worry seamed his aristocratic features, and age seemed to have dealt heavily with him.

"Ashton, I am glad you could and would come, for it is very important that I see you at once. Have a seat, and take a smoke."

"If I can be of any service, Mr. Oliver, I will be only too glad to accommodate you," Theo promised, taking the chair as directed.

The $10,000 Deficit Explained

Oliver paced the floor several times, then turned to his visitor. "Theodore, I am forced to make this confession, not with any desire to soften your judgment, nor to save my reputation—but because it is simply the right thing to do and justice must always prevail in the end.

"I have worshipped my daughter and pampered her, just like many foolish fathers do, ever since my first wife's death. I believe that is what chained me to our daughter since she was a tot. I have seldom refused to grant her slightest request, and Clarice was led to believe that I could well afford to supply her wants. She grew to be a reckless spendthrift, and I worked but the harder to main-
