

Good Will Message Spans Continents and Oceans

High-school students of four continents interchanged messages of good will over the telephone on the anniversary of the first Hague Peace Conference last May. Beginning in California, the words were relayed from state to state, and from Canada, Mexico and Argentina, until they reached Washington, D. C., while at the same time similar messages were converging on London from all Europe and from Australia and Java. Then the New World and the Old were united by telephonic exchange across the Atlantic. Above is shown the group in the Foreign Relations Committee room in Washington as Robert Hild spoke with students in London. Behind Hild is Senator Borah. At the left is Clare Ellis, making the first call from Sacramento in the presence of Vierling Kersey, California's Superintendent of Public Instruction.

but might work out a plan of economic independence for American Negroes extending into production, transportation, commerce, and eventuating in increased political power.

"The American Negro numbers approximately 12 millions," said Dr. Du Bois, "and that means that we are much larger than either Denmark, Greece, Hungary, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal or Sweden and very nearly the size of Egypt, half the size of Spain and one-third the size of Brazil."

"This surely indicates that we must have great economic power. The American Negro must on a conservative estimate earn and spend each year in the neighborhood of a thousand millions of dollars.

"Recently we have had some intimation of what the American Negro can do. He can to a large extent confine his patronage to such retail stores as employ colored people and treat colored customers with honesty and courtesy.

"In the matter of public service agencies, like telegraph, telephone, electric power, railroads and the like, the Negro through his political power and his power as a consumer, can compel to some extent the employment of colored people and courtesy and consideration in the treatment of customers.

MOORE COMING

pieces of the I.L.D., which is putting up a determined fight to save these innocent boys from the legalized lynching the Southern white bosses are planning.

Moore is here to tell the colored and white workers the truth about the Scottsboro case. He declares that the press has not and dares not print the truth, because, due to the injustice of the charges and the manner in which the trial was conducted, the case will not bear close inspection.

At press time, a new trial had been denied and an appeal to the state supreme court had been filed. This conscious whites will resist to the last moment any alterations of the verdict. Even though a stay of execution or a commutation of sentence by the governor is granted the fight according to local I.L.D. leaders, will only have begun.

There will be a mass meeting in the Plaza block at noon, July 9, and all Negro and white workers are urged to be present.

CHIC PAJAMA

If ever you wanted to look as though you had "just stepped out of a band-box" you should want to look it when you wear lounging pajamas. For unless your pajamas are very, very smart, you are apt to look as though you had "just stepped out of bed." Lounging pajamas should be glamorous as well as comfortable. Observe the one above, featuring the important characteristics of chic lounging—voluptuous trousers—sleenderizing seams—and vivid color contrast in its combination of plain and printed yellow silk. And its one-piece quality ensures a neatness that almost verges on the "band-box" effect.

WORDS OF WORLD GOOD WILL SENT OVER TELEPHONE

Students of Four Continents Exchange Voice Messages on Hague Anniversary

Messages of good-will, interchanged by telephone among the high school students of four continents, marked the observance of World Good Will Day last May, in celebration of the opening of the first Peace Conference at The Hague, Holland, thirty-two years ago.

Words Relayed From State to State
Observance of this occasion was under the auspices of the World Federation of Education Associations, in cooperation with the National Council for the Prevention of War, and the telephone was chosen as the medium for this international exchange as symbolizing the interdependence of the nations of the world today.

Focal points for the telephone calls were established in London, England, and in Washington, D. C., and early in the morning on the Pacific Coast this country's first call was made. From capital to capital, in State House or governor's mansion, school boys and girls relayed the good will message until it had passed through all the states of the Union and was received at Washington. From Canada, Mexico and Argentina, too, it came over the wires and by wireless.

Message Spans the Atlantic
At the same time, similar messages from the various nations of Europe, from Australia, even from the island of Java, were being telephoned to the Houses of Parliament in London.

Finally, when it was 4 P. M. in Washington and 9 P. M. in London, the connection between the two national capitals was established over the regular transatlantic radio telephone circuits, and the school children of the New World and the old exchanged their messages of good will. In this country the ceremony took place in the Foreign Relations Committee room in the Capitol. Then the process of relaying the message was reversed, and from state to state and to the neighboring countries the words heard from London were repeated to the groups of school children waiting to receive them.

Experience With World Communication

One of the objects of this international meeting by telephone of the children of many nations, according to Augustus O. Thomas, President of the World Federation of Education Associations, was to bring about a realization of the new kind of world in which we live, a world closely united by this means of fast communication for the adjustment of international differences or misunderstandings. It is the belief of this organization that participation in such conversations taking place half-way around the world, and hearing the voices of other children across thousands of miles, would help the young people in the schools of this country to form a new picture of the world today.

TAILORED COTTON

Everyone is wearing cotton. And everyone is wearing tailored sports clothes. You should conform in wearing tailored cotton sports clothes, but if you desire distinction, you'll avoid wearing dresses you are apt to see on everyone else. The greatest objective in learning to make your own clothes, over and above the thrift of it, is that you will have style and distinction that you're unable to buy. Here's an utterly distinctive frock, one whose smartness rivals its simplicity. It has an indefinite diamond design that adds very definite chic. The saucy revers are of white pique.
