

Whaling Ship Anchors at New York With World's Record Catch

Harpoons 1,444 Whales in 8-Month Trip to Antarctic Barrier

LOADED to the Pilsener mark with whale oil, the Sir James Clark Ross, Captain Oscar Nielsen, biggest whaling ship that ever visited our shores, recently anchored off Staten Island in New York Harbor, on her return from her maiden trip, with the greatest catch on record. The boiled down remains of 1,444 whales were in her tanks.

The whale oil was discharged here for the manufacture of high-quality American soaps, and the Sir James Clark Ross returned to her home port at Sandefjord, near Oslo, the 250-ton and blue-eyed Norwegian of her crew well content. They made whaling history, and each of them had a plump pay envelope coming to him.

Especially did Edward Jorgensen share in the money his exploits brought in. Smiling, weathered Jorgensen, harpooner, extraordinary, caught 254 whales during the Ross's eight months of coasting the edge of the Antarctic ice barrier, bringing his lifetime total to 2,700. His pay for the trip was $40,000.

He and his mates will not go out again until summer after next. The Sir James Clark Ross has caught enough whales for the time. In August, 1932, probably, the big red and white ship—women call it this modern kind of whaler a "factory" or "cookery"—will fill her tanks with American whaling oil and the head south to startle the curious once more.

For perhaps the most curious thing about the Ross, and all similar modern whalers, is what they must take petroleum oils with them to collect whale oil. As the trip oil and lubricants are gradually used up in operation, they are replaced in the tanks by cargo. The Ross, like many of her kind, is a motorship. The time-honored square rig of the traditional Nantucket whaler has given way to two diesel engines of 2,400 horsepower each.

Those engines must stand up under almost continuous use far from any harbor or repair works, for eight months. They run on heavy fuel oil, and Gargoyle Marine Oils, sea-going consignment of the Mobil oil used all over the world in motor cars keep them lubricated. The Diesels however, are only a part of the ship's machinery for the description "factory" fits her aptly. She is the parent ship of half a dozen "chasers." On these small vessels equipped with harpoon stations, the harpooners scout around for whales. No epic struggle of sturdy oarsmen occurs when the chaser gets its whale. The cannon bangs a line of rope flies out after the flying harpoon, and deep inside

"NOW I AM CIVILIZED"
(Wetzel Publishing Co., Los Angeles)
(Reviewed for The Advocate by Clifford Mitchell)

Not since I read Schuyler's "Black No More" have I enjoyed reading such a laughable satire on the race problem as I have in reading Eugene Henry Huffman's "Now I Am Civilized."

Although Huffman's book was out many months before Schuyler's it only recently reached me. Like Schuyler, Huffman has spared neither race and the reader that fails to get many a good laugh out of the experiences of Ras Taferi Hounin-Kounin is utterly devoid of a sense of humor.

Some months ago I read some press I am "Civilized" but after reading the book thoroughly I fail to find even the remotest justification of same. True the book is a satire but it correctly reflects actual conditions and only a hypocrite could find any possible objections to its portrayal.

Ras Taferi enters the white world through the back door—the kitchen—and the intimate experiences of life that he sees, hears and is a part of are but common-place incidents to those of our race who occupy a similar position in real life but the manner in which Huffman has written it provides over two hundred pages of continuous and hilarious laughter.

A few more writers like Schuyler and Huffman will soon have the world laughing at the ridiculous side of the race problem.

WORDS OF WORLD GOOD WILL SENT OVER TELEPHONE

Students of Four Continents Exchange Voice Messages on Hague Anniversaries

Messages of good-will, interchanged by telephone among the high school students of four continents, marked the observance of World Good Will Day last May, in celebration of the opening of the first Peace Conference at The Hague, Holland, thirty-two years ago.

Words Relayed From State to State

Observance of this occasion was under the auspices of the World Federation of Education Associations, in co-operation with the National Council for the Prevention of War, and the telephone was chosen as the medium for this international exchange as symbolizing the interdependence of the nations of the world today.

Focal points for the telephone calls were established in London, England, and in Washington, D. C., and early in the morning on the Pacific Coast this country's first call was made. From capital to capital, in State House or governor's mansion, school boys and girls relayed the good will message until it had passed through all the states of the Union and was received at Washington, from Canada, Mexico and Argentina, too. It came over the wires and by wireless.

Message Spans the Atlantic

At the same time, similar messages from the various nations of Europe, from Australia, even from the island of Java, were being telephoned to the Houses of Parliament in London.

Finally, when it was 4 P. M. in Washington and 9 P. M. in London, the connection between the two national capitals was established over the regular transatlantic radio telephone circuits, and the school children of the New World and the old exchanged their messages of good will. In this country the foreign work took place in the Ceremony Relations Committee room in the Capitol. Then the process of relaying the message was reversed, and from state to state and to the neighboring countries the words heard from London were repeated to the groups of school children waiting to receive them.

Experience With World Communication

One of the objects of this international meeting by telephone of the children of many nations, according to Augustus O. Thomas, President of the World Federation of Education Associations, was to bring about a realization of the new kind of world in which we live, a world closely united by this means of fast communication for the adjustment of international differences or misunderstandings. It is the belief of this organization that participation in such conversations taking place half-way around the world, and hearing the voices of other children across thousands of miles, would help the young people in the schools of this country to form a new picture of the world today.

COLORED GIANTS BEAT EUGENE, 4 TO 3

Eugene, July 18.—The Gilkerson Union Giants, Colored team of Chicago all stars, beat the Eugene Townies here today, 4 to 3. The Townies got a three-run lead in the first inning before the Townies had settled down, and they maintained the advantage by adding another in the seventh.

Eugene put on a belated rally in the ninth, which fell one run short of closing the gap. Joe Lillard, halfback of the U. or O., did a good mound job for Eugene, and held the visiting players to seven hits. The score—Giants 4 runs, 7 hits, 1 error. Eugene—3 runs, 10 hits and 2 errors.
