Hear Me Talking to Ya

CHARLES, THE DREW, former tutor of the Morgan College Bears, but more recently summer director of the Francis Swimming Pools in Washington, is a go-getter and a come-bringer, rolled into one.

Not that this is any news to you, for as the song goes, "you knew it all he time," but the reason for this belated mention of the fact-is largely because of his untiring efforts which resutled in Washington athletes' getting A. A. U. recognition.

That, in itself, while we admit that these athletes should have been recognized long ago, is progress-that is, if you know your D.C. and the adjacent territory. True, Drew did not shoulder ALL the responsibility for securing the registration of District athletes, but it was he who engineered the project and followed it through to a successful completion,

This column seldom swerves from its path to drop bouquets, in fact, it can hardly be said that such is being done now, but call it what you will, I feel that young Drew's accomplishment, in the face of high odds, is worthy of more than a passing nod. He has led the way that others older and looked upon as more "influential" failed to lead. Washington athletes, swimmers in particular, when they hold a meet can rest assured that it will not only be properly handled, but that their efforts will be suitably recognized and rewarded.

A posey, then, to Charlie Drew, and to those who assisted him. He leaves Washington-now to resume his studies at the McGill University Medical School, and this writer will probably miss the opportunity to give a farewell greeting. So here goes luck, Charlie, and may you continue the good work. G-

CONTINUING IN A personal vein, this double col. pauses to offer regrets to John Henry Lloyd, manager of the New York Yankees or Harlem Stars, as they are sometimes called.

Pop Lloyd, as he is best known, lost his wife by death last week. Mrs. Lloyd succumbed at the Lloyd home at Atlantic City after a brief illness. Earlier in the season, Lloyd was called South because of the death of his mother. Thus tragedy has twice stalked his path within the space of a few weeks.

But Lloyd, stoic that he is, has carried on, playing ball with his mates despite his bereavement and the fact that he is not gettingany younger. De-spite any faults he may have, Pop Lloyd should be an example that many youngsters of the sandlots today might well emulate.

This column extends sympathy to this veteran of the diamond. -G---

THE PHISTIC PHATHERS (dopes to you) juggled all of the boxing divisions last week and in the ups and downs our lads gained some long due recognition—which in this day and age, you'll concede is rawther refreshing.

Outside of our titleholders, there were contenders recognized, the most

And while on this subject of biff-and-slam, I notice that boxing has been prohibited down in Norfolk, Virginia. The city fathers claim that for boxers to tap each other with leather gloves is quite au contraire, as far as the state code is concerned. That being the case, I wonder what about Newport News, Richmond, Roanoke and some of those other cities where the fistic sport is practiced. How is it that they get away with it? It seems to me that the Norfolk blue noses have misinterpreted the law. Maybe it read "no fighting" instead of "no boxing." And they punch clocked	E. E.
