BOOK REVIEW

Reviewed by Clifford Mitchell "MULATTO JOHNNY" (By Alin Laubreux)

Yan is a half-breed. The son of a French sailor and a popinee Kanaka tribe woman. He raised in one of the south sea islands in the Pacific. Physically strong and attractive his personality is appealing and at the same time is the cause of a life continued struggle and sorrow.

As a young man and on his first spree he kills with his fist a white man, while both were on a drunken whoopee party. There, in the islands, as elsewhere, this meant death to Yan, if caught. He escapes. His father aids him by providing a well provisioned boat. He sails for America but in a storm he is washed ashore in an island populated by cannibals.

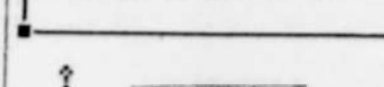

Eventually the cannibals capture him but his physique so attracts them that instead of making the proverbial stew out of him they imprison him, providing a retinue of tribe girls, who, one by one are replaced as they are about to become a mother.

This situation continues until Maele a captured girl of a foreign tribe is brought to him. From her he learns that his progeny have all been killed to provide a delicious meat for the tribe and to his dismay he learns that the pork they have been feeding him and of which he was so fond is his own kin.

Maddened by this knowledge he plans and effects an escape and the eight years of adventure, slavery and troubles he goes through to reach his native land and his father, only to find him dead, makes and absorbing and thrilling story of intrigue in Australia and the South Sea Islands.

HAS WIDE ACQUAINTANCESHIP

The following paragraphs were taken from the "THIS AND THAT", a special column contributed by Clifford C. Mitchell, in a recent issue of the Chicago Bee: "Communications from every part of America have reached me and in each they refer to the BEE and this column in particular. In commenting upon some of these I will try to take you part way around the country where my correspondents dwell. "A few weeks ago I commented in this column on one, Myrtle Campbell. At the time I stated that I didn't know who she was or where she was at. This column has smoked her out. She lives in Portland, Oregon, and is a writer and poetess. She writes under a pen-name and for that reason I didn't recognize her real name when I first saw it. I can't tell you her name for she says that must remain a secret. And thanks for the poem, "Sleeping Stones". Myrtle. Was that one dedicated to me, particularly?"
