

DISTRESS SIGNAL

"Yonder yacht is flying a flag of distress."
"What does she signal?"
"Wants to know if we have a cork-screw aboard."

COLDS THAT DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

He Stopped Whiskey!

By John's Wife

For the happiest little woman in all this little town;
And my merry laugh and singing
Takes the place of sigh and frown
For JOHN HAS QUIT HIS DRINKING
And is like himself once more,
And the world is just a paradise
With such happiness in store!

One day I read some verses—
"Mary's Miracle" the name,
And I said, that's John exactly,
And I'll find out if you're true,
So I sent for GOLDEN TREATMENT,
(As my sister would be)
And I put it in John's supper
And I put it in his tea,
And it did its work a little bit,
And on other, so, you see,
It was something kind of sailing
By little Doctor's aid,
And I washed and prayed and waited,
(And said some, too, I guess),
And I didn't have the greatest faith,
I'm ashamed now to confess,
And John never thought a substance
He was being cured of drink,
And soon he's as well as my own,
It makes me cry to think!
Just makes me cry for pleasure,
I'm so proud to be his wife—
Bliss he is cured of drinking,
And leads a nice, new life.
"How John he quit a-drinking!"
I can't say it's done enough!
And later and earlier a letter
As he would a poem read,
And when I saw my prayer at night
As that of an old man,
I pray for John the most of all—
Then GOLDEN TREATMENT.

THE CATFISH KID

Confidently he walked back to his stool. The crowd was believing itself hoarse for him. The announcer held up his hands two full minutes before the fuss died down enough for him to speak the names of the fighters.

Malloy's manager and seconds, I could see, were a little nervous as they looked my man over. They had never heard of him before, and couldn't tell just what sort of a fight they had on their hands. Yet there could be no backing out. The public watched Malloy closely, and what a howl would go up if he didn't make good against this unknown!

And then the gong sounded! Mick came out of his corner like a whirlwind, and the crowd edged slightly forward in their chairs, for in that first round Malloy seemed to hit the Catfish Kid with everything except the water bucket and the ring posts.

The Kid, anxious to make good, crouched low and seemed content to try and stay the limit, but his chances looked mighty slim that first round.

He covered and backed away, and Malloy drove him from pillar to post. He had the Kid on the ropes half a dozen times, flammng rights and lefts to his midriff with a machine-gun-like regularity.

Nobody in that crowd, not even myself, thought that the Kid would be able to last out the round.

So sure was Mick Malloy, after that first minute, that he had been unnecessarily nervous about this stranger, that he began to play with his foe. He figured that he could carry him for a few rounds, give the crowd a run for its money and a show worth seeing. He'd pull a few laughs by making this tyro look like a rank amateur indeed.

So he pretended to be groggy, yet slipped the awkward blows of the Kid off face and shoulders with practiced ease. His knees seemed to sag, yet his hands slashed in just the same, rocking the head of the Catfish Kid. Once he leaned on the ropes for just a second, chin in hand, and pretended to go to sleep.

The crowd laughed. It was funny. They laughed at the Kid. This poor fool, who had bounded into the ring so eagerly and with so little preparation!

Then the crowd fell suddenly silent as a strange metamorphosis took place there in the ring. They saw the Catfish Kid straighten, saw the uncertainty vanish from his face, saw his movements gradually becoming less awkward until his feet were fairly twinkling over the canvas.

As the first round ended and the second got under way, the defensive tactics of the Catfish Kid changed to tactics of offense. He shifted in after a flat-footed break, neck drawn down, left hand straight out, right hand cocked at his hip, and so swiftly one could hardly follow his blows, he aimed to his toes, leaned forward, and sent two straight lefts, one after the other, drawing his left back no more than eight or ten inches, straight in to the face of Mick Malloy.

Malloy went back on his heels, and the Catfish Kid, though he took a vicious right and a bitter left to the stomach, sank his right fist to the wrist in the abdomen of the championship aspirant.

From that moment on this thing was a fight.

Malloy lunged in. The two men stood toe to toe for the remainder of that round, black against white, guarding not at all, hurling their fists in with never a pause. One minute of the round had gone. The two maniacs battled like Trojans, the one simply for the joy of fighting to win his first ring battle, the other to retain his claim upon the championship try.

The entire audience arose from their places and moved down front. The aisles were crowded. Men and women stood on tiptoe, while as many as could manage climbed to the stage and stood as close to the ropes as they dared.

Beauty Hints

R. B.: White spots are indicative of glandular trouble and sometimes goiter. It is well to have a physician prescribe a remedy. In the meantime the patches may be stained or covered with a dark powder.

T. M.: The white of an egg applied as a coating on the face and allowed to dry on is a mask of commendable astringent value. You can feel a tightening of the sagging skin. Use a second coating if you wish.

O. N.: Fat glands are less active in winter than in summer, and when the skin chaps it is necessary to make up this fat deficiency. Lubricate the skin with cold cream or olive oil.
