SCULPTURES YOU OUGHT TO KNOW ABOUT

From the book, "Emancipation and the Freed in American Sculpture," by Freeman Henry Morris Murtau

Friends of Douglass Raised $10,000 for this Monument in Rochester, N.Y. A Son, Major Charles R. Douglass, was Used by the Sculptor as a Model.

THE DOUGLASS MONUMENT, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

Here and there throughout the country, in public buildings, colleges, churches, and cemeteries, there are busts, medallions, tablets, and a few monuments, placed or erected in honor of, or in memory of, individual people of color.

Few of these are sufficiently conspicuous or "monumental" to justify extended description. The most important is the Frederick Douglass Monument in Rochester, N.Y. Mr. Douglass was a resident of that city for many years and it was there that he published the "North Star."

Shortly after the death of Mr. Douglass at Washington, D.C., in 1895, a movement was started by John W. Thompson, a prominent colored man of Rochester, to erect a monument in that city as a memorial to Mr. Douglass.

Mr. Thompson was assisted by other prominent citizens, white and colored. They secured an appropriation of $3,000 from the state legislature. The Republic of Haiti, to which country Mr. Douglass had been United States Minister, gave $1,000. The remainder of the $10,000 which was expended was raised mostly from private donations.

From Mr. Thompson's excellent book, which gives the history of the undertaking, it appears that less than five hundred dollars was contributed directly by colored people, of which one hundred dollars came from the New York Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, of which denomination Mr. Douglass had been a member.

The monument was unveiled in 1899. It was erected conspicuously in an open space near the railroad station. On account of certain changes regarding the station and its approaches, the position of the monument is now somewhat inconspicuous; hence a movement is on foot to have it moved to one of the public parks, which will probably be done.

The sculptor was Sidney W. Edwards.

The bronze figure is eight feet high and stands on a pedestal of about the same height. The pedestal has on its sides extracts from addresses of Mr. Douglass.

His son, Maj. Charles R. Douglass, posed for the figure. The pose is dignified and commanding. It is intended to portray the attitude of the distinguished orator as he stood before a large concourse of people in Cincinnati and made his first public address after the final ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment.

We can well imagine that we hear him repeating in a tone of sober triumph, his words on that memorable occasion:

"Fellow Citizens: I appear before you tonight for the first time in the more elevated position of an American citizen."

Those who knew Mr. Douglass well will appreciate the strength of this work. It is not merely a man with such and such physical features, it is markedly personal, and clearly represents a person of more than ordinary force and commanding presence.

For the statue itself as a mere work of art, perhaps we may not rightly claim marked distinction; few "portrait statues" have or can have artistic distinction; and generally they need no interpretation.

In connection with portrait statues, symbolism or even adventitious figures or accessories are seldom used with advantage. Indeed, if a person has been sufficiently eminent, a mere portrait figure, or possibly a bare column or rough stone, may be a satisfactory memorial. The matter was well covered by the epitaph which I think related to the great Greek dramatist, Euripides. It ran something like this: "This monument doth not make thee famous, O Euripides, but thou hast made this monument famous."

In personal memorials, however, the most of us desire a "likeness"; and one which bears not only a physical resemblance but which shows "character." Here the artist has given us both. Mr. Edwards has done his work with a sympathetic appreciation of his subject and, moreover, with taste and ability.

A Parade of One

My most embarrassing moment was many years ago in a small Virginia town. At the time I was an officer in the Elk, who paraded through the streets before an annual picnic and excursion. At the time the band was minus a drum major. As I possessed a full dress military uniform I was chosen to lead the band through the streets. The line of march was, as I thought, fully understood by the members of the band so we started off down Main Street. I strutted along at the head of the parade, looking neither to the right nor the left, maintaining a very dignified posture. I soon noticed that the music of the band was becoming quite faint and I bent enough to glance around.

Imagine my embarrassment when I discovered that the band had made a square turn a block back and had gone on up a side street, and there I was marching proudly by myself.

Romance Ended

My most embarrassing moment took place the last time our popular class president took me out to dinner. I had eagerly looked forward to the occasion and had worn my prettiest frock. Everything went lovely until I started to cut my steak, which was anything but tender. The meat splashed into my gravy. Gravy splattered over everything. Horrified, I looked up to see my escort's face spotted with flecks of gravy. He merely said, "Please, hand me a towel." My downcast eyes then caught sight of my dress, which was a total wreck. As I mentioned before, it was the last time he took me out.

WEEK'S POEM

FOR A GOLDEN WEDDING
By Katherine Lee Bates.

Young love is passion;
Old love is peace;
Such is love's fashion,
Never to cease.
Young love's a carol,
Old love's a psalm;
Child love is wild love;
Old love is calm.
Young love is rapture;

Old love is rest;
Shy wings for capture;
Deep heart for nest.
Dawn love is silver,
Wait for the west;
Old love is gold love—
Old love is best.
