In the beginning the Republican Party espoused the helpless Negro's cause. It freed him, made him a citizen and gave him the ballot. This beneficence entailed a heavy debt of gratitude. This gratitude was accorded in full measure, pressed down and running over, as long as the beneficient attitude continued. "Why did the lamb love Mary so; for Mary loved the lamb, you know." But the sweetest wine makes the sourest vinegar. The best friends make the bitterest enemies. The best part of the Republican Party to which the Negro owes a debt of gratitude is under the ground.

Since the "better-class" whites have more brains, education, culture and humanity (?) than the worse classes, it is far more sensible for the Negro to wage his battle for rights first against the "better" whites. He has far better chance of reasoning with them. Besides, if he wins in battle for the better place, he is better-off than if he wins a fight for the inferior places. That is horse-sense; he must fight either way, so he might as well fight for the best.

That reminds me: in Paris I saw the smartest shops for tollet articles and "beauty" products displaying Josephine Baker's picture in their showwindows to advertise their wares, calting her one of "the elegant dames" who uses their goods and service. I daresay that Adelaide Hall found no opposition when she was sojourning and playing in Paris to occupying the best accommodations she could afford to pay for.
