

LOCAL NOTES.

Chris Ulrich does not propose to get out of wood about the time the roads get four feet or less in mud and to avoid that dilemma he has had a pile of limb wood as big as a small barn piled up in front of his mill and this week he has been taking sun baths while assisting in sawing it. To cut the wood Mr. Ulrich rigged up a circular saw out in the street run by a belt from the engine in his mill.

The Fish Lake Ditch Company has commenced work up their big ditch which is to bring water from Fish Lake, up near Mt. Pitt and from which Butte creek takes its rise, to the Valley lands north of Medford. Work has been suspended since last winter but the Company give it out that the ditch is now to be completed. The work was started three years ago but for some cause it has been shut down for different periods. The Company has spent $100,000 and it will take much more than that to complete it and get the extensive system of irrigation installed that they have under way. The Company also plan to put in a big electric power plant at a point where the ditch will drop from the divide down the Antelope creek and where some 300 feet fall can be had to supply the power and light to the various towns of the Valley.

If you have any Timber land you want to sell—See T. C. Norris.

There is probably no other section where vegetation will grow with so little moisture as here in Southern Oregon. A proof of what can be done in gardening without the aid of irrigation is to be seen in the garden of C. S. Fling in the east part of Jacksonville. The land is up the hill so far that there is no natural sub-irrigation as there is on some of the low land, yet Mr. Fling has as thrifty a garden as is to be seen in the Valley. His vines, melons, squash, pumpkins, cucumbers are stretching over the ground and he will soon have ripe melons, squashes and cucumbers. The tomato vines are waist high and loaded with fine tomatoes. The corn is thrifty and is now almost in ear. The beans, peas, and carrots and other vegetables have yielded a big crop. There is but an acre and a half in the garden but the amount of stuff that it has produced would astonish an Eastern person not familiar to the productiveness of Jackson county soil.

J. K. Anderson, who settled on Anderson creek in the fall of 1852 being the first settler in that part of the county, and for whom Anderson creek was named, has begun suit against H. D. Austin et al to restrain the defendant from taking water for irrigation purpose from Anderson creek. Soon after Mr. Anderson settled upon his donation claim he put an irrigation system and took up the water right to the creek that flowed through his land. In recent years other settlers took up land on the creek above Mr. Anderson and began to use the water of the creek for irrigating land and this year they were using so much that they were depriving Mr. Anderson of the necessary water for his fields. Mr. Anderson retained Wm M. Colvig, who got out an injunction before Judge Hanna in the circuit court, restraining Mr. Austin and the others from taking water from the creek until the case can be heard in court, which will be done at the September term.

Calling cards, the latest in style and printed so neatly as to resemble copper-plate work at the Sentinel office.

Samuel Hawkins, who came to Jacksonville in the fall of 1852 and mined for a time on Jackson creek, but who is at present residing on Galice creek, arrived in Jacksonville Sunday and spent Monday looking up the location where his partners had given up a claim that they considered too poor to work in those days of $10 a day diggings, but which would now pay for working. The country had been dug over so and had grown up so thickly with brush that Mr. Hawkins was not sure that he could find his old claim. The object Mr. Hawkins had in view was to work his old claim, but had to abandon the idea as all the water rights are taken, even if he could find his claim, and as the land is all deeded the owners would prohibit his taking up a claim upon it. In the 50 years past Mr. Hawkins mined over much of Southern Oregon and he is yet a hale, hearty man good for a number of years yet of seeking after the elusive yellow metal.
