Two twigs loaded with Japanese persimmons have been added to the Sentinel exhibit by Emil Britt. The tree from which the twigs were cut was grown from seed planted by Mr. P. Britt some years ago. The tree is vigorous and a prolific bearer, and it bears a fruit that is seedless and of larger size and better flavor than is usual with the Japanese persimmon. The fruit is the size of a large prune and has a reddish tint instead of the yellow of the American variety. It has a good flavor, but the skin retains much of the puckering qualities so prominent in the American persimmon.
