The board of trade accomplishes something definite each meeting for the betterment of Jacksonville. It may not be so very much, but the constant dripping of the water wears the rock away and the constant effort of the board of trade will eventually bring a prosperity to Jacksonville and vicinity that will more than repay the members for their efforts in working for the upbuilding of their town.

The securing of a fund of $1220 for the betterment of the Jackson Creek road is a matter of public moment that will be a lasting credit to the Jacksonville board of trade. The building of a section of fine turnpike road, such as this is to be, will be an advertisement of no small importance to Jacksonville and to Jackson county. Strangers will look upon it as the beginning of an era of good roads and they will take it as an evidence of a progressive, prosperous community in which it is safe to make investments. Jacksonville and Jackson county will be more than repaid for the outlay on this road in the increase of taxable wealth that it will be the means of bringing to the county and the town.

The hay market continues to have a very large element of uncertainty to it. The war now on between Japan and Russia may create a demand for hay for their cavalry and artillery horses, but as each nation has been laying in supplies for sometime in anticipation of war needs it is likely that they have hay enough to last until the new crop comes on. The big government contracts for hay for the Philippines is strengthening the markets of San Francisco, Portland and the Sound. The prolonged drouth of the months past in Southern California has caused all the old crop to be fed out and large importations from Oregon and other sections to be. The continued scarcity of water has so crippled the irrigation system of that section that the hay crop for this year is conceded to be a failure and only a very short crop can be harvested at the best, which means large importations of hay from the Northern coast. Northern California had a good crop last season and there is said to be several thousand tons of hay yet on hand in that section. Here in Rogue River Valley competent persons estimate that there is above 3000 tons of hay that is for sale, of which 2000 tons is baled and the other 1000 tons loose in the barns. There is every likelihood that hay crop of Rogue River Valley this season will be the largest ever harvested in the Valley as the acreage to alfalfa has been steadily increased for several years and now is more than double of five years ago. But another matter must be considered along with this hay problem. Formerly a large per cent of the stock of this Valley were fed through the winter on straw and grain hay, but since grain raising has been very largely abandoned all stock has to be fed on alfalfa, this increasing the demand for that hay. In the Willamette Valley grass is rapidly superceding grain, but the stock and dairy business have also been largely increased so that there is not so large a surplus of hay as otherwise would be. Hay is now declining in price in this Valley, but may not drop much more should the California and foreign demand increase. It is not likely at all even with the increase acreage to grass that hay this harvest will drop to the prices for which it sold a few years ago. The increase in dairying and stock business and the immense area to fruit has brought to an end the period of cheap hay in the Rogue River Valley.
