

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

Tom Burnett, one of the veteran stage drivers of the old California and Oregon Stage Company, that in pioneer days run stages from Portland to San Francisco shortening the run as the railroad was built out from each of those cities until the two sections of railroad were closed in the Siskiyou mountains south of Ashland, is here on a visit to his cousins, M. J. Hanley, E. F. Hanley and Miss Alice Hanley. Thursday Mr. Burnett was in Jacksonville where he and W. G. Kenney, and S. P. Jones, two other C and O stage drivers had a reunion and spent an hour in recalling incidents of the days they handled the ribbons and the whip and swung their teams along the roads of Southern Oregon, in daylight and darkness, in storms and winter snows, nothing stopping them but the bottomless mudholes that each winter put sections of the road all but out of use. Mr. Burnett drove the last stage out of Roseburg, and which was drawn by the famous six horse gray team that was on the Roseburg section for so many years. The railroad had been completed on to Myrtle Creek and the day following, the mail train was run on to that place. The next extension was to Riddles, then to Glendale and then to Grants Pass, reaching Medford January 17, 1884, and Ashland soon after, where a long halt was made while the railroad was built across the Siskiyou mountains to a connection with the railroad that was being built north from San Francisco. Mr. Burnett was considered the crack whip of the road and so expert was he in handling the long lash that he could pick a fly off a leader and never disturb a hair of the horse. On that eventful morning, that Roseburg was to bid good bye to the stage, a big crowd was out to weep at the passing of the old order of things and to cheer at the new order that the railroad would bring. A brass band added to the excitement of the occasion and Mr. Burnett, when all was ready to start, swung his whip to give a gentle touch to the leaders, but instead of doing that with the artistic touch of a Hank Monk as was his wont, he knocked his hat off instead, like the veriest green-hand on the road. It so upset Mr. Burnett's pride that he came near falling off his seat and all that trip his whip hung limp in his hand so disgusted was he with his ignominious failure of the morning when he intended to go out of Roseburg with a grand flourish as become the crack driver and the crack team of the road. Mr. Burnett now lives on the donation land claim that his father took up in the early fifties at Robert's Hill near Roseburg, where his home overlooks the old stage road, the railroad, the Umpqua river where Mr. Burnett is spending his days in quiet.

Miss Frances Barnes, who at the close of her work at the State University, went to Portland to attend the State Teachers' Association and to visit friends is to be home next week to spend a month. Miss Barnes returns to Portland the first of September, she having been given a position in one of the schools of that city.

George Hoffman, deputy county assessor was in Jacksonville Thursday from his home near Applegate. Mr. Hoffman returned recently from a trip to Plumas county, California. He does not think that part of the coast can equal Rogue River Valley either in climate or resources.

Miss Mary Underwood is home for a month's vacation from Ruch, where she closed, on the last Friday in June, a successful term of school. Miss Underwood is to teach her third term at Ruch and is to begin school the first Monday of August.
