CHOICE MISCELLANY

Invisible Furs.
A physiologist buried his wife away from a furrier's window.

"The best of all furs are invisible ones, dear," he said. "The food we eat gives them to us. And we are warmer in them than many a millionaires shivering in her silver fox skins or her Russian eables."

"I mean," he went on, "that in the winter food warms us better than clothes do. If we changed in November to winter food, we would not need to change to winter clothes—to furs and woolen socks—for the food would keep us warm, though we wore the flimsiest summer garments."

"Sugar, starch and fat, above all fat, are the warming foods, the winter foods. We should take great quantities of fat while the cold lasts. But some people, especially children, dislike fat. Well, they need not take it in its crude form as an edging to beef, ham and mutton. They need only take it blended. Thus fat is pleasantly blended in eggs, milk contains a lot of fat, so does butter, and there is a certain percentage of fat in lean meat, in nuts and in game and fish and poultry."

"Let us then eat fat in the winter, and invisible furs will warm us, so that"

"But I prefer visible furs," said the physiologist's wife, laughing, as a lady in seal skin and ermine glided by in a huge motor car.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Fruit Seed Fuel.

A new kind of fuel will very soon be manufactured in Los Angeles, for which it is claimed that it will produce no odor, smoke or gases and very little ashes from its consumption, that no kindling will be needed to set it on fire and that two bricks will last practically all day in a stove or grate. It is composed of fruit pits from the canneries, mostly peach and apricot. About sixteen tons of these pits are to be used a day at the factory. The shells are broken up by a machine, and the inside pits, or kernels, are shipped to France, where they are used in the manufacture of prussic acid. These are mixed with other materials, including crude petroleum, or kerosene, a residuum deposit from the oil fields, planing mill shavings and pulp from the olive oil mills. In connection with this fuel "smudge" fuel will also be made for producing dense smoke. This will be used in orchards to preserve trees and fruit from frost and has already been put to excellent service on a number of big ranches.—Scientific American.

Selection in the Navy.

Until recently most of our rear admirals have averaged sixty-one years when attaining that grade and have been retired within a year. The arguments demanding a lesser age are based upon two reasons: First, our fleet commander in wartime should have had previous experience as a rear admiral with a sea command. He ought not to be compelled to learn his trade as admiral in the face of the enemy, and he should already be a practical expert in the direction of squadrons against a hostile force. No officer can become such an expert if he is promoted to rear admiral at sixty-one and retires at sixty-two. Second, an officer at fifty-five is physically and temperamentally better qualified to take up the sea duties of an admiral than at sixty-one. These same reasons apply to the ages of captains and commanders. Younger admirals mean younger captains and younger commanders. Most of our captains are nearly sixty years old, and the commanders are generally well up in the fifties.—Army and Navy Life.

A Remarkable Wagon.

J. B. Beyer of Sobolia township, Pike county, Pa., has a farm wagon the woodwork of which he built himself in 1863 in a wagon shop in Barryville, N. Y., in which he was an apprentice. Mr. Beyer did all the woodwork on the wagon by lamplight, sawed the hubs, split and hewed every spoke, felloe and axle. Purchasing a farm in Sobolia township the same year Mr. Beyer took his wagon with him to the farm and has used it constantly ever since. He has never had the tires set or a dollar's worth of repairs done to it, and to all appearances it is good for another century. Aside from good workmanship and material the secret of its lasting qualities is due to the fact that it has always been housed when not in use.—Philadelphia Record.
