Trees in Churches.
The parish church of Ross, in Herefordshire, is remarkable for two fine-eims which grow beside the pew for-merly occupied by the famous John Kyrie, the "Man of Ross." Trees were scarce around Ross in his time, and tree planting became part of his philasthropy. The story goes that & ruthless rector of Ross cut down some trees Kyrie had planted near the church, whereupon these two elms forthwith sprang up by way of pro-test. Several other country churches have trees growing inside. In the chancel at Kempsey, near Worchester, has been preserved a horse chestnut that springs from the beautiful tomb of Sir Edmund Wylde. An irate pedasogue threw a chestnut, with which he caught one of his school children playing during service, upon the tomb, where it took root and has flourished. —Westminster Gazette.

"Gene to the Dovil."

The old inns of England have been responsible for the origin of many common sayings. An instance of this is the proverbial phrase, "He has gone to the devil." On Fleet street, London. near Temple Bar, was once a tavern which was known by the strictly old fashioned name the Devil and St. Dunstan. It was famous for its good dinners and excellent wines and received a large patronage from the law-pers of Temple Bar. It was familiarly known as The Devil, and when a lawyer left his of-

See to go there he usually left a notice on his door, "Gone to the Devil." There were some who notice on his door, "Gone to the Devil."
There were some who patronized the favers to the neglect of their business, and the notice was so regularly exhibited on their doors that it finally came to be used to characterize the man who was losing his grip and going to destruction.—St. Louis Republic.

Two of a Kind.

A well known clubman in New York likes nothing better than to bunt "big game" in British Columbia. During his game" in British Columbia. During his last expedition to that region he was in camp with a friend from Minnesota. Toward morning, says the New Yorket, he awoke shivering with cold. The fire was very low. His companion was fast asiesp.

It isn't nice to get out of a warm blanket to roll frosty logs to the fire, so the wily New Yorker gave his friend a kick and then pretended to be asiesp. There was no response, and presently the man from New York tried another kick.

At this the westerner broke into a

At this the westerner broke into a laugh. "I did the same thing to you twenty minutes ago," he explained, "and that's how you came to be awake."

Then of course both turned out to

An Assient Booth Legend.

An eastern legend says that as Solomon one day was consulting with his grand visior, the angel of death appeared and cast a searching look at Solomon's companion. The startled visior immediately begged the great king to lend him a certain magic rug on which whoever sat could be transported in an instant to the remotest on which whoever sat could be transported in an instant to the remotest part of the earth. The king granted the request. The visits stepped upon the rug and bade it transport him to the center of the desert of Arabia. It is to him away instantly. The angel of death stopped a moment in his flight to my to Sciomon: "I looked at that man so closely because I was surprised to find him here, as I had been commanded to summon his soul and was told that I should find him in the center of the great desert." Then the angel passed on and a moment later met the visits in the appointed place.

A first of Habit.

They were on the way to the church when the prospective husband observ.

"Molly, the last time I was married I lest the ring before I got to the par-son's. But I'm sure of it this time." "Where is it, John?" she asked.

"Where is it, John?" she asked.
"I've got it in my mouth," he said.
"I'm sure of it now."
But when they stood before the prescher the latter asked:
"Where is the ring?"
The groom gulped, choked, stuttered and finally exclaimed in deepair:
"Heavens, if I ain't swallowed it!"

New York's Firemen.

Much as they admire the men of their fire fighting force, comparatively few New Yorkers are familiar with the insignia of the fire department. The trumpets and axes are the insignia of an officer. The trumpets show that the waters is a member of an engine company and the axes that he belongs to a hook and ladder company. One silver trumpets or ax designates a lieutenant; two trumpets or axes are the mark of a captain; two gilt trumpets crossed are wern by the chiefs of battalions; these gilt trumpets crossed indicate the rank of deputy chief and four trumpets crossed are wern by the chiefs. The regular firemen of the ranks wear the familiar Maitees cross.—New York Stribune.
